TELLS ANECDOTE OF POMBO

How Great South American Poet Told Distinguished Lady to Kiss Him.

Mr. Phanor J. Eder tells this anecdote of Pombo, the great South American poet, who died in 1902.

It happened in a New York literary salon presided over by a distinguished Argentine lady. Pombo had been presented to her, and she asked him, with much enthusiasm, who was the anonymous poetess, the famous Edda, the Bogotana.

"Do you really find these verses worth reading?" asked Pombo.

"Worth reading! Verses vibrating with the deepest passions of a woman's soul, so essentially feminine verses too, exhaling the mysticism, the adoration of a Santa Teresa! Oh, you men! Who among you could write such verses?"

"Well," said Pombo, "Edda is now in New York, and if you want to make her acquaintance—"

"Speak, man!" cried his hostess, impetuously. "Where does she live? What's her name? I'll see her tomorrow. I will cover her with kisses!"

"Then begin, senora!" said the ugly little Pombo. "I—I am Edda."

King Haunted by Dead Wife

Sofia.—There is a room in the Konak at Sofia of which King Ferdinand alone has the key. It contains no precious documents, no costly jewelry, no bullion chest, but only the full-length portrait of a princess long since departed. The gentle Marie Louise gazes sadly out of her gilded frame, and though Ferdinand in moments of exhilaration passes by the room with head averted, in days of stress and trouble he seeks to hide his misery in the silence of the locked and secret chamber.

During the last ten months mysterious rustlings have been heard in the National Museum and the horror-stricken palace as of some one wandering unhappily from room to room, seeking something that could never be found. On these occasions, when King Ferdinand bethought himself of leaving the chapel door open, his dead wife's shadow has been seen to pass the portals, and he has himself knelt at the altar there, his face buried in his hands, as though awaiting a supernatural visitant. No allusion to these vigils has ever passed his lips, for Ferdinand confides in no one.

Over her children the spirit of Marie Louise also broods as fondly as in her lifetime, and the people believe she visits their bedside whenever they are ill. The nurses who cared for Princess Eudoxia during her long illness last year attributed her almost miraculous recovery to the prayers of the dead mother, who was seen in spirit form in the chapel nightly, always kneeling in the same place slowly fingering her diamond rosary beads.

Owes Success to Wife.

King Ferdinand, who has had an extraordinary career, owes his most solid successes to the dead lady who even now watches over him, as he believes, to restrain the impulses against which she vainly warned him when alive, and concerning which even from the other world she has given signs of sorrow and disapproval.

He was the pet son of his mother, the cleverest daughter, of the late Louis Philippe, king of the French. She never ceased to plot for the restoration of the Bourbons to the throne of France, but in the meantime did not disdain to pick up any possible crown for her sons. Her plans were mostly foiled, as in the case of Philippe, older than Ferdinand, who married Princess Louise of Belgium in the hope of succeeding the late King Leopold. But the marriage was so ill-assorted, and Princess Louise showed such violent antipathy to her husband, that a speedy separation was the result.

With Ferdinand, Princess Clementine had no such trouble. He was the most docile and obedient of her sons, inheriting her own subtle disposition and tenacity of purpose.

When Prince Battenberg of Bulgaria had displeased the Russian emperor by his independent attitude, and was consequently forced to leave the country in the dead of night, with only time to throw a coat over his sleeping attire, the palace at Sofia remained vacant. As soon as Battenberg's friends recovered from the shock of his being kidnaped they set off on a tour of Europe to search for a princeling who would undertake the difficult job of governing Bulgaria.

Quietly Becomes Sovereign.

This quest came to the ears of Clementine, who, learning that a favorite haunt of these big game hunters when in Vienna was a fourth-rate restaurant, sent her son to make their acquaintance. After some friendly conversation, during which they did not suspect that he was anything but what his uniform proclaimed him to be—a simple lieutenant in an Austrian regiment—he declared himself their man. Without further preamble he took them round to his mother's palace and thus proved to them the reality of his claim to high birth and his connection with two great royal houses. There was no reason why he should not start a dynasty of his own, and the bargain was quickly concluded. In a few days the citizens of Sofia were greatly astonished to see the flag flying once more over the royal palace, and a young man with a prominent nose and a serious face driving through the town in solitary stateliness. There was no equerry, no display, no acclamation, no rejoicing. People were still asking themselves, "How long will Russia allow him to stay?"

Royal Wife Finally Secured.

As soon as Ferdinand felt his throne to be a little more steady, Princess Clementine began to cast matrimonial nets on her son's behalf. But there were few aspirants. Royalties held aloof, and nothing but blue blood would satisfy Ferdinand and his mother. It was by working on the strong religious sentiments of the Duke of Parma that the prize was at last secured in the person of an eldest daughter, the ill-fated Marie Louise, to whom was entrusted the mission of furthering Catholicity in schismatic Bulgaria. Thus was the gentle, fragile idealist, tender offshoot of the pious House of Parma, mated to an ambitious adventurer, of her own rank indeed, but of a temperament and character entirely foreign to her. The personal inclinations of Marie Louise were all for the cloister, where, indeed, several of her sisters have since found a home, but in deference to her father's wishes she gave her hand to Ferdinand and set off with him to work for the advancement of Bulgaria.

Almost every educational and charitable institution in the country owes its origin to her initiative. In a short time she achieved what he had vainly attempted—the reconciliation of his subjects to a foreign ruler. Legends of her bounty and devotedness still survive among the people today. When an heir to the throne was born, nothing seemed wanting to the happy outlook. But this very child, who should have set the seal on her happiness, became the cause of discord and ultimatley led to the untimely death of his mother. Russia, who had viewed with disfavor the consolidation of Bulgaria under a prince about whose election she had not even been consulted, now came forward with her inexorable demand that the future ruler of Bulgaria should belong to the orthodox creed or forfeit recognition by the powers.

Refuses to Be Apostate.

Ferdinand's mind was soon made up, but it remained to him to persuade Marie Louise. Thunderstruck at the alternative, she at once refused to consider what her conscience told her was an act of apostasy. During two whole years she succeeded in getting the baptism deferred, but as Russia grew more insistent, and Ferdinand more anxious for his crown, she was forced to face the inevitable. Resistance availed no longer, and as a last protest she left the country.

The baptism of Prince Boris according to orthodox rites was carried out with great pomp in the presence of Russian envoys, and Ferdinand's position was henceforth secure. Strange to say, his own subjects revolted against the breach of faith which weighed so heavily on their beloved princess, and even Russia's approval did not mend matters. A wave of criticism and contempt which found expression in the Bulgarian press proved the general indignation. Many seized the opportunity to vent their private spleen against a prince whose affected superiority wounded their democratic pride.

Returns to Her Husband.

Nevertheless, Ferdinand, having accomplished his purpose of ingratiating himself with Russia, now began to put things straight with the rest of the world, and for this to succeed it was necessary that his wife should return. But Marie Louise desired nothing more than oblivion. Her maternal instinct, however, strengthened by the insistence of the Pope, and Ferdinand's expostulations and excuses, finally prevailed. She returned to her old duties, resuming her good works, but with the joy of life extinguished for ever within her. It is said that no reproach ever passed her lips and she gave no outward sign that her husband had forfeited respect. To the last she remained his faithful, devoted partner, and her careful advice saved him from many pitfalls such as those into which he since has sunk. With terror she sounded the depths of the dark soul that could instigate the assassination of his premier, Stambouloy, when he dared to oppose him. Vainly did she plead with him to bridle his ambition and devote himself to the real progress and solid development of the country rather than to his own personal aggrandizement. While she lived he made a pretense of dissociating himself from the work of the Conitadjis in Macedonia, whose outrages filled Europe with horror.

"God will never bless crime," was her constant warning. "And one day Macedonia will be lost to us through the evil deeds of our wild propagandists."

Saw Impending Disaster.

She was probably the only person who knew whither Ferdinand's secret hopes tended, and she foretold that disaster would come at the moment when his star seemed most in the ascendant. When in the recent war luck turned against him, the soldiers murmured among themselves: "Surely this is what our princess foretold. Every sin demands its punishment."

After her death, King Ferdinand, desirous of restoring the great state functions which were a vital feature of his court, looked around for a hostess who would share the throne, which from being princely had now been raised to the status of royalty. But it was not easy for him to find a mate. No Catholic princess would give her hand; he made several overtures at the Russian court, but there was no Grand Duchess forthcoming. Finally, however, a Protestant princess of the House of Reuss consented to abandon her spinsterhood and occupy the place left vacant nine years ago by Marie Louise.

Though unpossessed of her predecessor's winning charm, she has nevertheless done great and good work in Bulgaria. During the recent war her devotion to the wounded was unbounded, but it is well known that her married life is by no means happy, her relations with her husband being markedly strained.

Ferdinand himself has never concealed the fact that, in spite of their differences, his heart and allegiance are with the princess, whose shade hovers round him, admonishing and shielding. Confident of her never-failing assistance, he alone is not afraid to confront the stately specter who trails her diaphanous draperies along the corridors of the palace that witnessed the tragic disillusionment of her hopes.

LEARNED HIS GOOD POINTS

Man No Doubt Had Often Been Unfavorably Compared With Dead Man He Described.

It was a contested will case, and one of the witnesses, in the course of giving his evidence, described the testator minutely.

"Now, sir," said counsel for the defense, "I suppose we may take it, from the flattering description you have given of the testator, his good points, and his personal appearance generally, that you were intimately acquainted with him?"

"Him!" exclaimed the witness. "He was no acquaintance of mine!'

"Indeed! Well, then, you must have observed him very carefully whenever you saw him?" pursued counsel.

"I never saw him in my life," was the reply.

This prevarication, as counsel thought it, was too much, and he said:

"Now, now, don't trifle with the court, please! How, I ask you, could you, in the name of goodness, describe him so minutely if you never saw him or never knew him?"

"Well," replied the witness, and the smile which overspread his features extended to the faces of those in court, "you see, I married his widow."

Sure-Thing Player.

"George, you must go right away and ask papa for my hand."

"That's all right, little one. I asked him first."

"What! You didn't wait to ask me!"

"Nixy, Mabel. I'm a busy little man, girlie, and I waste no time on chances."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

USE FOR THAT OLD BEDSTEAD

If You Have It Stored in the Attic Here Is a Way Profitably to Utilize It.

When metal beds came into use, you stored an old-fashioned hardwood bedstead—useless lumber, but too good to be thrown away—in the attic. Meanwhile you've been trying hard to save money to buy a bookcase, and without a suspicion that the discarded bedstead could easily be home-made over into precisely the piece of modern furniture that is needed for the living-room. The carved or bevel-finished high pillow end—denuded of its legs—makes the back of the case and its narrow string pieces furnish the uprights which first must be grooved on their inner sides to support the shelves for which extra boards must be provided. That this shelfing material is of another and cheaper wood, matters not, as the entire case must finally be painted. Usually paint harmonizing with the finish of the living-room is employed, so that the case shall look as though it has been built-in, but some of the hard woods a very good imitation of ebony may be produced with black enamel pigment and when the brightly covered books are in place the effect is not somber.

WARNS FOREIGN INTERESTS OFF

President's Significant Message to All the World.

FOR POLICY OF MORALITY.

United States Will Help the Emancipation Through Motives Of Morality, Not Expediency—Canal Opens Up New Era.

Mobile, Ala.—While avoiding any mention specifically of Mexico, or any European influence connected with the Mexican situation, President Woodrow Wilson delivered a speech here Monday, which appeared to be freighted with significance, and which served to point with further directness the policy of the United States, not only toward Mexico, but toward all Central and South American republics.

Mr. Wilson spoke before the Southern Commercial Congress, and the big audience which heard him constantly was swept with cheers and applause. The President smilingly took his hearers into his confidence when he explained he must speak "with moderation and without indiscretion."

A score of South American Latin-American diplomats sat just behind the President while he spoke, and many of his remarks were addressed in conversational tones to them. There were those in the audience who thought the President might take advantage of the opportunity afforded by his speech here to say something regarding the Mexican crisis.

He, however, spoke only in general terms, but many of his sentences were pointed with a meaning so clear as to leave little doubt of their intent.

Meant For Europe.

"Material interests"—a phrase much in use internationally of late in characterizing the attitude of foreign nations toward Mexico—frequently was employed by the President. He declared the American republics had suffered long from the hard bargains forced upon them by concessionaries seeking "material interests" in the countries affected. The President declared that through motives of "morality and not expediency" the United States desired to help the Latin-American Republic to an "emancipation from the insubordination which has been inevitable to foreign enterprises."

The President's speech was uttered with a confidence which bespoke the dominant part the United States expects to play in the future of the American republics. Not through any idea of "material interests," he carefully explained, but through a love of the principle of constitutional liberty.

"The United States will never again seek to obtain one additional foot of territory by conquest," he declared amid applause.

Mr. Wilson spent six busy hours in Mobile. He arrived early in the morning and was taken jointly in hand by the members of the Southern Commercial Congress and citizens of the city. He was breakfasted, driven about the city by automobile, taken on a sight-seeing expedition in the harbor and started back to Washington with cheers ringing about his special train. The President was in a tearing rush from the moment he reached the city until he left and if any dispatches of state reached him, their delivery was deferred until he reached the seclusion of his train.

GATES DIES IN HIS CAR.

Son Of Late Financier Victim Of Apoplexy At Cody, Wyo.

Cody, Wyo.—Charles G. Gates, son of the late John W. Gates, died in his private car here of a stroke of apoplexy. His body will be sent East by way of Billings, Mont. Mr. Gates came West about a month ago on the advice of physicians, who accompanied him. There was some improvement after his arrival here and a hunting trip was planned. It was successful from the sportsman's viewpoint, but the exertion seemed to leave Mr. Gates weaker.

HUERTA MAY QUIT.

Reported Pressure Being Brought To Bear Upon Him.

Mexico City. — A report, which gained currency here, that Gen. Victoriano, Huerta had offered to resign the presidency in favor of David De La Fuente, former minister of communication and the candidate of the Liberal Republicans in the recent election, was later characterized as absolutely untrue by the Norwegian minister, Michael Stromlie, who had been credited with being one of the principals in the incident.

KILLS HER DIVORCED HUSBAND.

Woman Shoots Man In Front Of His Eighth Wife.

Williamson, W. Va.—Mrs. Sarah Sloan shot and killed her divorced husband at an isolated point on Blackberry creek, Kentucky, near Matewan. After the shooting Mrs. Sloan boarded a train and came here, where she was later arrested. From what can be learned Mrs. Sloan killed her husband in the road in front of the Sloan residence. Mrs. Sloan, it is said, was the seventh wife of Jud Sloan and the man's eighth wife witnessed the shooting.

ORDINANCE FREEZES CITY.

With Temperature Low, Sparta Coal Men Can't Sell.

Sparta, Wis.—This city of 4,000 population is experiencing a real freez-out. All orders received at the three main coal yards of the city were rejected, and buyers were notified that it was impossible to operate under the city's new ordinance, which requires that all coal should be weighed on the city scales. One small coal-yard remains, but it cannot meet the demand.

EDISON DENIES HE'S A GENIUS

Tells Reviser of Latin Bible "I'm Only Mechanic and Couldn't Do Your Work.

Thomas A. Edison listened intently at his home at Llewellyn Park, in Orange, N. J., as the Abbott Francis Gasquet, president of the English Benedictine Monks, unfolded to him the gigantic task in which the commission appointed by Pope Pius X., of which he is the head, is engaged in revising the Latin Bible.

The inventor, accounted an agnostic, had asked the abbott to dinner to hear of the work he has undertaken. When the abbott had finished telling of the tremendous scope of the task, involving as it does the minute analysis of ancient manuscripts wherever they may be found in Europe, Mr. Edison turned to him, saying:

"Father Gasquet, I want to tell you that I wouldn't like your job. It's more than I could do."

"But you, Mr. Edison, are the genius of the age," protested Abbott Gasquet. "My work does not compare with yours."

"Oh," replied Mr. Edison, with a wave of the hand, "I am only a mechanic."

After dinner Abbott Gasquet, in the Edison library, heard operatic arias.

"I'm feeling like a boy," said Mr. Edison, when asked if he had fully recovered from his recent illness. "I'll never take another vacation."

PAINFUL ECZEMA ON HANDS

Bienville, La.—"I was troubled with eczema in my hands for several years. The skin would break and look like it had been cut with a knife and my hands were so sore I could hardly bear to put them in water and could hardly use them. When I used them the blood would run out. They would heal a little and then they would get worse than ever again. They were very painful. The eczema got to breaking out on my arms in pimples which itched and burned very badly. "I used different remedies, also used all kinds of facial creams and on my hands and arms and I did not get any relief until I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I cured my hands and eczema with Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Miss Fannie Mostiller, Oct. 5, 1912.
