Don't Neglect Kidneys

Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Prescription, Overcomes Kidney Trouble

It is now conceded by physicians that the kidneys should have more attention as they control the other organs to a remarkable degree and do a tremendous amount of work in removing the poisons and waste matter from the system by filtering the blood.

The kidneys should receive some assistance when needed. We take less exercise, drink less water and often eat more rich, heavy food, thereby forcing the kidneys to do more work than nature intended. Evidence of kidney trouble, such as lame back, annoying bladder troubles, smarting or burning, brick-dust or sediment, sallow complexion, rheumatism, maybe weak or irregular heart action, warns you that your kidneys require help immediately to avoid more serious trouble.

An ideal herbal compound that has had most remarkable success as a kidney and bladder remedy is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. There is nothing else like it. It is Dr. Kilmer's prescription used in private practice and it is sure to benefit you. Get a bottle from your druggist.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper. Adv.

The Revolt of Mary

By HI AKERS

(Copyright, 1917, by W. G. Chapman.)

"But we can't afford it, my dear."

It seemed to Mary Beard she must shriek at that phrase. She had been hearing it every time she suggested the replenishing of any article of wardrobe or house furnishing for the last nine years, the period of her married life. This time it was the rug in the living room.

"Joe," she said, "you've never told me anything about your business. I think I have a right to know."

Joe Beard was positively flabbergasted. He had never confided this matter to his wife, and had never expected her to ask. Mary had always accepted the situation, and made the best of it. He began to temporize.

"Why Mary I—I thought you knew that our interests were identical, that I was doing the best I could—"

"That isn't the point," she broke in. "Of course I knew that. But I want to know just how things stand. If business is in such a bad way that I must go with a shabby old coat, and we must have bare floors, I must know just what we can afford, what we can depend upon, so I can spend the money to the best advantage, so I can help economize."

"We are not exactly in a bad way, but we are running pretty close. I always thought you had enough to do in running the house, not to trouble about running the store," he answered, smiling at her in a way which was intended to close the argument. But it did not. She persisted, and he, finding evasion ineffective, flung out of the house in a high state of irritation without giving her any satisfaction.

Beard's partner, Fred Fason, had been married only five years, and as they had lived out of town, Mary had never visited them. They had now been living in the city about six weeks, and Mary determined to call on Mrs. Fason partly for their better acquaintance, but mostly to try to find out what she could not from her own husband.

The apartment was very attractive, and Mary noticed that all the furnishings were much better than hers had ever been. Mrs. Fason was fashionably dressed, and a neat maid opened the door. Mary was drawn to the pretty little woman, who was about six years her junior. In a few weeks they were seeing each other very often.

Mary shrank from anything like criticism of her husband to an outsider, but she felt if it had to come to that it must, for she was determined to know the true state of the finances. She began by asking Mrs. Fason if she thought the business was not doing well. The lady looked at her in undisguised astonishment.

"Why, didn't you know we were doing better this year than ever?"

"I don't know anything about the business," replied Mary.

"You don't? Why Fred tells me everything. I bet I know almost to a dollar what the profits were last year." And Mrs. Fason proceeded to lay some figures before the greatly surprised Mrs. Beard. "Yes," she added, "Fred is not a bit extravagant, but he is such a dear, he's always wanting me to have more than I will allow him to get. Now he wants to buy me a diamond pin and bracelet, but I'd rather have a car that we both can enjoy."

To say that Mary Beard had something of a "jolt" would be putting it mildly. She went home thinking hard. "Diamonds," "automobiles," while she, the other partner's wife, was pinching a dime in two.

What should she do? Should she leave him? But John had many good traits, and she loved him. Still she had no intention of letting things go on as they were. She said nothing to John but continued to think.

One evening as Beard entered his apartment he heard the sewing machine busily clicking. At this hour Mary was generally getting the dinner, or smilingly awaiting him in the dining room. Entering the living room, he found the chairs piled with men's trousers, and waistcoats, in various stages of completion, books and papers cleared from the table to make way for thread, buttons, etc., and Mary hard at work at the machine. So noisily was it going that Mary did not even seem to hear him enter. Dumfounded he stood in the middle of the room looking from the piles of sewing to the figure bent over the machine, and back again. Finally he exploded with: "Mary! what does this mean?"

His wife looked up, smiled pleasantly, and blandly answered: "Why John, dear, I'm just doing a little work to help you along, that's all."

"But this is not at all necessary."

It was quite useless for John to bluster and protest. She was so cheery and smiling over it all that he was entirely nonplused.

Not seeing his wife make any move towards the dining room, and not being able to make much conversational headway above the clatter of the sewing machine, Joe went up to her and touched her on the shoulder.

"Come Mary! Do drop that, and let us have dinner."

She paused long enough to look up very sweetly and say: "You'll find it all ready for you on the table. I can't stop now, or I won't have that work finished when I promised. You know you say you're not businesslike if you're not prompt."

"But you must—"

"Listen, dear," she interrupted, "I know you won't mind just taking some cold scraps, when I'm so busy. And I've saved quite a bit on the dinner, too. Oh I'm learning to economize," she laughed.

He even tried to drag her from her work. After he had gone in the other room she shook so with laughter, she almost broke a needle. She would have given something to see his face when he sat down to those 'scraps.' But after all it was quite enough for Mary to see his face when he came back.

"Do you think I'm a canary?" he asked.

"Oh, wasn't there enough?" she asked, sweetly surprised.

The next evening they were invited to dine at the Fasons. The prospect of getting a decent meal caused Beard to accept with alacrity. Mary put on a gown rather older and more shabby than was strictly necessary. Joe did not dare to remonstrate because he had told her a short time before that it looked well enough to go anywhere. But on arriving at his partner's he felt a pretty sharp pang of mortification at the contrast between the handsomely gowned hostess, and his badly dressed wife. He wondered he had never noticed it before. He concluded it was because Mary had always made the best of everything.

Beard felt a decided obligation to return his partner's hospitality, and invited the couple to dinner. In consultation with his wife he tried to impress upon her the necessity of the meal coming up to the Fason dinner as far as possible. Mary declared she would do her best.

When the guests arrived they found, to Joe's mortification, piles of unfinished garments still littering the room. Mary apologized, saying she had been trying so hard to finish the work, she had not had time to get it out of the way. Fason looked extremely surprised at the state of things, and his wife exclaimed: "I don't see how you do it all! Look here, Mary, you've got to call a halt, or you'll kill yourself!"

"I don't want her to do it," protested Beard, "but she won't listen to reason."

"I believe in living as you go along," said Fason. "I know you're salting your money down in government bonds. Well, that's all right. But maybe you won't be here when the time comes to enjoy it."

"Perhaps you're right," murmured Beard.

The dinner was well cooked, but extremely simple, and the small roast had to be closely carved to go around. Mary and Blanche Fason exchanged knowing looks. They were together in the plot. After the guests were gone, Joe said: "Mary, you've been putting me through a series of humiliations—"

"Yes," she broke in, "And you have been putting me through 'a series of humiliations' for nine years. When I found out it was all uncalled for, I determined to either leave you, or cure you. Which shall it be?"

"It's the cure, dear. Now let us begin to live."

Mary buried her face on his shoulder, and her arms around his neck seemed to seal the compact.

Problem in Patriotism.

A curious incident has happened in connection with a recent performance of Berlioz's "Faust" in Paris. When it was announced the veteran Saint-Saens—to whose name be all honor—wrote a vigorous plea for the elimination from the score, both now and always, of the Hungarian March, on patriotic grounds. In the discussion which naturally ensued it was respectfully pointed out that the great composer, in pleading for one act of patriotism, was really advocating something quite unpatriotic—the mutilation of a great French masterpiece. It was said that even if Saint-Saens himself were to write something to fill the gap, which would be the best solution—the objection would still hold. —London Daily News.

Publicity's Golden Mean.

No financial institution can afford to sacrifice its character or sully its name by adopting the methods of the charlatan or the faker, yet between the ordinarily accepted sense of the word, igaity and its antithesis there is a path sufficiently broad to accommodate the message of any institution and carry distinction in the telling. The purpose of publicity is not notoriety or charlatanism—it is educational, purposeful—clean and a mighty force for conservative development. It is to carry your message to those who need your service, need your advice, your counsel or your wares. A successful advertising campaign is merely the lengthened shadow of an idea. An idea which carries to the minds of the public the character of your service or the quality of your wares. It is not sufficient to tell the public that you exist. You must tell them why and for what you exist, the ideals you represent, the service you render.—Pacific Banker.

Phonograph Lights Itself Up.

A flashlight that is attached to a phonograph so that it shines directly upon the path of the needle has been invented by George E. Bernecker of Milwaukee, according to the Popular Science Monthly, which says that this makes it possible to operate a phonograph in the dark without danger of scratching the records.

Diet, Exercise or Death!

An eminent medical authority writes that most of our city folks die of a thickening of the arteries or of kidney disease. The kidneys become clogged and do not filter the poisons from the blood, and one trouble follows another, high blood pressure damages the heart, arteries and kidneys. Usually its danger signals are backache, pain here or there, swollen feet or ankles, rheumatic twinges or spots appearing before the eyes.

"The very best remedy is this: Eat meat but once a day, or not at all. Plenty of outdoor exercise, and drink pure water frequently. Before meals take a little Anuric, the great uric acid neutralizer that is easily obtained at the drug store. When you have dizziness, chills or sweating, worry, or dragging pains in back, try this wonderful enemy to uric acid, which Dr. Pierce of Buffalo, N. Y., discovered and named Anuric. Anuric, more potent than lithia, dissolves uric acid as hot water does sugar."

HEALTHY CHILDREN come from healthy mothers. And mothers will certainly be healthy if they'll take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Nothing can equal it in building up a woman's strength, in regulating and assisting all her natural functions, and in putting in perfect order every part of the female system. It lessens the pains and burdens, supports and strengthens weak, nursing mothers.

It's an invigorating, restorative tonic, a soothing and bracing nervine.

Castor oil is good for children or adults, and especially good for aged people. A pleasant form of a vegetable laxative that is to be had at any drug store, was invented by Dr. Pierce, who put together May-apple (podophyllin), aloes & jalap. Ask at any drug store for "Pleasant Pellets," and they can be had for little money. They contain no calomel and are of vegetable constituents, therefore harmless.
