NEED 100,000 TROOPS TO FULFIL MANDATORY

That Many American Boys Will be Required in Turkey if Senate Accepts Views of Wilson

BY SNELL SMITH

"One hundred thousand American troops will be necessary to the maintenance of our mandate in Turkey under the League of Nations," says Capt. S. Gale Lowrie, professor of political science in the University of Cincinnati, in an interview.

Capt. Lowrie has just returned from Constantinople, where he was in charge of the Red Cross work of extending relief to the families in Armenia and Turkey of drafted American soldiers, several thousand in number, and is on his way home.

"The necessity for so many troops," he said, "arises out of the difficult condition in that part of the world. The Balkan question is unsettled. So are the disposition of Asia Minor and Arabia. The peace conference has not yet taken them up, except to urge that the United States take over the Turkish possessions. England is about to withdraw her troops from Asia Minor. She has enough to do in Palestine and Mesopotamia, to say nothing of Egypt and Africa generally. Even so, she is attempting to edge out France in control of Syria. She hopes in Mespotamia's oil resources to recoup her financial losses of the war.

"If we do not accept the mandatory, the withdrawal of British troops will result in anti-Christain and pro-Moslem massacres. We have become a world power and must keep our finger on the pulse of the entire world. If we do not maintain peace in that particular section, we shall have to take part in the engulfment. On the other hand the expense will be great and we shall have divided interests in both hemispheres."

"I have not entirely made up my mind on the subject, but I think we ought to let this mandatory alone. Now that the war is over the European nations are already jealous of each other. Any government, no matter which it might be, would have trouble in governing the former possessions of the Turkish Empire. None of the European nations wants the other to take them, but they all want us to do so. At any rate, I am convinced that neither the mandatory nor the league as a whole will stop all future wars."

Ashes to ashes and dust to dust; if the producers don't get you the profiteers must.

The Shantung Muddle.

In his endeavor to meet the storm of righteous American protest against this country's giving its approval to the betrayal of China into hands of Japan—the same being underwritten by the signers of the Versailles Treaty of Peace—President Wilson has harped upon a single string, that of some sort of a promise extracted from Japan's peace delegates to restore, at some unfixed date in the future, China's "sovereignty" over Shantung. Tokio officials, taking their cue from the American President, have indulged in frequent, if not satisfactory, talk about "sovereignty." President Wilson and Japan's spokesmen have sought to mislead the world, particularly the American people, into the belief that the Shantung issue is solely a question of real or nominal sovereignty, and that the peace treaty gives to Japan only the rights and powers which were held by Germany.

Germany at no time exercised sovereignty in Shantung. In a recent issue the Nation printed the German text of the Chinese-German treaty of 1898 granting a Kiao-chow leasehold to Germany, together with an English translation of that treaty. This shows that Germany never had any sovereign rights in Shantung, and the Nation rightly holds that when he speaks of Japan having promised to return the sovereignty without qualification to China President Wilson is either uninformed in regard to the situation or "is disingenuous with the people."

If Japan exercises any semblance of sovereignty in Shantung, either to retain or to surrender, it is not as the beneficiary of a privilege lapsing to her from Germany, but, as the Nation puts it, "simply as the receiver of goods stolen by the allied governments from China." Germany's only concessions were leasehold rights, and as such they were forfeited when China severed relations with Germany and entered the war on the side of the Allies and America—at the instance, primarily, of the government of the United States.

There has been no suggestion from President Wilson or from Japanese leaders that Japan has any thought of restoring to China the leasehold and economic concessions in Shantung which have passed into her hands as the result of the deal made at Paris. All this talk of restoration of sovereignty, whether it emanates from Tokio or from the White-House-on-Wheels, is camouflage designed to cover up the real situation. The Chinese people see through that camouflage. They understand that the effect of the peace treaty is to establish Japan in Shantung just as Japan is fortified in Manchuria, where all economic rights worth while are held by the Japanese, and only the shell of sovereignty is left, as a plaything, to China. Chinese understand that with Japan in Shantung, backed by European Powers and the United States in its control over not only the Tsingtau but also the lines of transportation throughout the great province, a dagger is pointed at the heart of China. For with control over the northern section of the Tientsin-Pukow railway, and with her military opposite at Tsinau-fu, Japan will be in a position at any time to cut the main artery of transportation between North China and South China.

It is as if Japan, by grace of the peace negotiators and with the support of Europe, had been firmly established in the heart of California—only more so, since control of the Shantung railways in Japan's hands is much more of a menace to China than would Japan's control of the railways of California be to the United States.—New York Herald.

Baron Goto Hits Wilson.

That President Wilson voted at Versailles in favor of upholding the Japanese contentions in regard to racial equality and that may have had something to do with his participation in the arrangement to give Shantung to Japan, has been brought out in the Senate debate on the treaty.

In an astonishingly frank interview Baron Goto, a member of Japan's supreme council on foreign affairs, recently stated that Japan considered herself the spokesmen of all Oriental peoples, and, having obtained the support of President Wilson, would not give up her fight for racial equality. "Both President Wilson and Colonel House voted with Japan for racial equality at the peace conference," he said.

Opponents of the treaty as it stands are therefore calling to mind the President's statement at the conference with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee at the White House that it was necessary to give Japan Shantung in order that it be brought into the League of Nations and even his supporters in the Senate are of the belief that he is weakening his case by his attempting to minimize the Shantung steal.

COUNTRY GETTING TIRED OF PUERILE WORD TRICKS

Mr Wilson's talk about Ireland getting relief from the League of Nations is pure humbug, whether conscious or visionary. There is no provision in the League Covenant for an appeal by a province or section of any member-nation directed against such nation to any branch of the League. There is a provision by which a member of the League may introduce the case of a non-member, but assuming that Ireland could get some Government—Japan, for instance—to raise the question of her future, Great Britain would reply at once that Ireland was a non-member but was part of a member, viz: of Great Britain herself, and could be represented only by the regular British plenipotentiaries.

But if in spite of this protest the League Council or Assembly insisted on hearing the Irish plea, and assuming that Great Britain consented to sit in and listen, of what use would any majority decision be to Ireland? It is Mr. Wilson himself who insists that majorities count for nothing in the League. Every conclusion must be unanimous to be effective. Any Power may by its sole, single vote veto the action of all the rest.

This is the reason why Mr. Wilson tells the people of the United States that they can safely accept the humiliation of Great Britain having six votes in the League while this country has only one. He asks us to consider that this country can control the League's action by its one vote, yet Ireland can get justice or independence in spite of England's six. Can fatuous false pretence go further?

Americans, naturally, are forced to ask, in view of Mr. Wilson's latest bid for a class vote, whether Porto Rico and Hawaii and the Philippines can also bring the desire of some of their inhabitants for separation from the United States before the League, and secure a hearing and a decree in their favor under the Article XI. Or is the League a sort of "double back action" affair, as Sam Weller used to say, which works one way in one case and another way in another case, according as it suits Mr. Wilson's convenience?

Really, the country is tired of such puerile juggling with words.
