How to Live

Common Sense Comments on Health, Happiness and Longevity

MENTAL HABITS.

No one escapes trouble, so whatever may be your condition you have no monopoly in suffering. You have your compensations. Don't whine and get the complaint habit. "Make the best of things." This homely phrase is, after all, the shibboleth of life. It is the faculty of seeing some good—of drawing some inspiration from the most hidden source. that makes life endurable, that glorifies it. Life is pleasant or unpleasant, hard or easy, according to the way you look at it, the way you think of life. Thoughts govern action, and he who governs his thoughts is master of his destiny. Destiny is not about you, but within you. Healthful, hopeful, optimistic thoughts are essential to strong minds and bodies.

Worry is one of the very bad mental habits; it injures beyond repair certain cells of the brain; and the brain being the nutrient center of the body, the other organs become gradually injured, and when some disease of these organs or a combination of them arises, death finally ensues. Thus may the habit of worrying kill. Only too often mental habits are morbid in their nature, and consequently cast a morbid influence upon the physical system over which they rule. Especially is this true when our minds are centered on the involuntary functions of the body. A man who has his mind constantly upon his digestion will soon have indigestion. Nature purposes to run her own machinery, and when we undertake to supplant it by human plans or artificial ways we destroy the natural process and disease results.

Thinking of what is eaten during or after meals is a dangerous practice, and if continued until it becomes a habit will be a greater obstacle in the way of curing any disease of the stomach than any other factor.

A person who suffers pain, and suffers his mind to revert to it constantly, establishes a nerve habit of pain, and the sense of pain grows, while the capacity to endure pain lessens. There can be no greater calamity to chronic invalids than that they get together and tell their ailments to each other. Such a course is but nursing disease and rendering it less curable. It should always be the aim to cultivate reverse habits of expression to those we feel during illness. Sickness is not the least of the opportunities in life. It is the time for reflection. It does not come by accident usually, but is the effect of a cause. Reason and reflect upon the cause rather than the effect. The break in the wrong modes of living which is present affords the best opportunity to change the bad mental habits and a start in better ways.

Many people go into society just for the purpose of telling their aches and pains and troubles. Such people should be sent to the pest house and kept in quarantine until they are cured; they are as untouched by the myriad happy influences of life as the mole is by the light of a star or the flash of a comet. They say "No one is as bad off as I am." Their salutation is always one that plunges at once into the condition of the liver, stomach, nerves, or some bodily ailment. Forget it! Don't get the habit of talking about sickness with every one you meet. Can't you find a topic of conversation more elevating than that of your aches and pains and troubles?

Cheerfulness is to the body what sunshine is to vegetation. Hence with a person who is in search of health, the essential thing to do is to cultivate cheerfulness, hopefulness, courage, and not allow one's self to think of his ills, much less to talk about them, except to those who may find it necessary to know them in order to properly direct his life. LEARN HOW TO LIVE.

* * *

Life is the interval between one breath and another—he who only half breathes only half lives, but he who uses NATURE'S rhythm in breathing has control over every function of his being.

* * *

Many people treble their troubles, making three out of one, by looking forward, looking on, and looking back. Troubles grow mightily, if you brood over them.

* * *

Fatigue which is not recovered from after a night's rest, is incompatible with the leading of a normal, efficient, wholesome, and happy life.

* * *

The aim of life is to produce the perfect man, so one must watch over one's integrity of mind and body.

* * *

The requirements of health are good air, good food, suitable clothing, cleanliness, and exercise and rest.

* * *

Work keeps the human being in contact with stimuli from without that are necessary to his health.

* * *

Self-distrust will destroy you; trust, surrender, abandon yourself; believe and thou shalt be healed.

* * *

The way to live long is to live wisely, and especially to be moderate in all things.

Docile Chinese Women.

To her man the Chinese woman shows the fidelity of a dog to its master. She is proud to raise a large family. She drifts with the tide—never questioning, always accepting. She has no servant troubles to worry about, no divorce suits, no nerves. Simple acquiescence to the age-old order of things as they are is the basic principle of her existence.

GREED AND POVERTY.

The fear of poverty is not in itself a bad thing. It may become the mother of thrift. It acts as a spur to endeavor, and some men, like some horses, do best under the spur. Poverty is not always an unmixed evil. In fact, it is and has been looked upon as one of the distinctive Christian virtues, although there seems to be rather a feeble desire to practice this particular grace. Greed, on the other hand, is always bad. It is plainly the outcropping of the hog in human nature, says Dr. Charles A. Eaton in Leslie's. It is the fear of poverty run amuck. It is illustrated by the drunkard who often had too much but never got enough. Greed is at the bottom of most of our troubles today and has been equally fruitful of evil in every age and among every class. We can never come to permanent social peace while the fear of poverty embitters one-half the people and greed drives the other half to self-destruction. Nor will it get us anywhere to infect the whole population with the greed germ and turn society into a glorified trough.

Patience is one of those graces of the spirit that is indispensable to the Christian character. There is a whole book of the Bible devoted to this grace. But outside of all religious consideration, in its technical sense, patience is one of the most practical and effective of the virtues. It does a great deal toward the making of a true man. It indicates a strength and poise of character that give one faith in the man who reflects this virtue, says Ohio State Journal. One cannot have faith in a man who is constantly fretting and fuming. It shows him to be a sort of feather driven about by the wind and impossible to tie to. Religion without patience is a diluted article. Citizenship is very much concerned in this grace. The impatient citizen is always getting himself and others in trouble. He has not a particle of respect for the axioms of life, and is therefore wavering, inconstant and unreliable. He must needs be watched, and if he is a religious man, his religion is to be doubted.

A Turkish delegation came to Paris all primed to argue and dicker about "concessions" that Turkey might make in order to get peace. It is now reported that the delegation has been politely advised to go home. Had the attitude of the Turks been less preposterous they might have been permitted to remain and answer questions. Of all the people that have striven to gain freedom from Turkish tyranny only one, the Armenians, were to be granted independence. From a Turkish viewpoint such a "concession" might have appeared generous enough. The trouble is that Turkey is in no position to offer concessions of any kind. The little new Turkey will be all Turkish just as the little Austria will be all Austrian and the little new Hungary all Magyar, says Cleveland Plain Dealer. Germany and Bulgaria fare better, inasmuch as antebellum Germany was mostly German and ante-bellum Bulgaria almost wholly Bulgar.

The ex-Empress Eugenie left over $10,000,000. It is not often in history that so much substantial goods are saved from the wreck in the downfall of royalty. Still, it is doubtful if all her millions were compensation to the aged ex-empress, once the ruler of fashion and the envy of the world, for the tragedy of her life, which left her bereft of power, happiness, husband and child.

A news item relates that an exuberant citizen kicked the copper who sought to restrain his demonstrations and, while the story doesn't go into details as to what happened to the citizen we find nothing in it to dispel our lifelong theory that kicking a policeman is about the most unhealthy of outdoor sports.

The report that the sultan of a South Sea island has willed all his wives to a Yankee sailor indicates that his majesty was not informed about the traditions of sailormen whose way is said to be to scatter their wives rather than to concentrate them in one port.

A United States army prisoner in Cuba threatened a hunger strike in consequence of a diet of beans and potatoes. The only alternative in the matter is to offer a menu of terrapin, soft crabs, roast turkey and lobster salad, and tremblingly await results.

If Capt. Gabriele d'Annunzio could get over the notion that he is playing the lead in an old-fashioned ten-twenty-thirty melodrama, the situation would be relieved, but the world would miss a lot of laughs.

The London Lancet, long a mainstay of the therapeutic use of alcohol, is now taking up the germicidal effects of tobacco, a matter to which medical science has hitherto given little attention.

It would be easier to abolish the use of poison gas in warfare if one nation could ever be certain that its next door neighbor was living up to the agreement.

Fruit in the Morning.

Don't make the mistake of going without fruit in the morning. Most of us don't have fruit enough and there is no time when it is more beneficial than as the first course of breakfast. Eating fruit for breakfast is largely a matter of habit. If you get out of the habit of it you soon find no breakfast complete without some sort of fruit.
