Whitman Sought by Collectors.

Walt Whitman's manuscripts and first editions are now bringing high returns to the rare book dealers. Gabriel Wells, the dealer in fine books, has sold the manuscript of the poem, "After All Not to Create Only," for $1,500. The latter half of the poem is written on the reverse side of the stationery of the United States treasury department, in which Whitman was a clerk at the time. Commenting upon the value of first editions of "Leaves of Grass," Mr. Wells says that they have doubled in value during the last five years.

Turks and Ducks.

Janet, a four-year-old, was getting up one morning recently when she fired this question at her mother:

"Where is my old sweater, mother?"

"Why, you sent it to the little Armenians," said her mother.

"Well, why don't they send it back? Didn't the ducks kill all the Armenians?" came back Janet.

She had heard about the Turkish outrages in the near east, but evidently thought the Turks were a species of barnyard fowl, which in her youthful mind easily became confused with the duck.

The Reason Why.

The school teacher was giving an object lesson on sheep to the infants' class, explaining how they are washed, sheared, etc She then showed the whole class a picture of a sheep and a lamb.

"Now who can tell me why it is that the sheep has a short tail and the lamb a long one?" she asked.

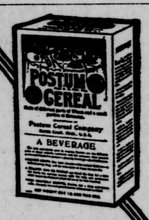

Little Joy jumped up immediately, and this was her reply:

"Please, teacher, the sheep's tail was shrunk in the wash."—Every Woman's.

NUMBER OF SUBURBANITES WHO KEEP CARS AT HOME INCREASES

Garage Combines Art and Utility.

In the early days of the automobile, and, in fact, quite recently, the owner was satisfied to house his car in almost anything that had a roof, garages were unknown and owners of cars had little thought of that item, the barn being sufficient for one's needs.

Not so today. With the growing popularity of the automobile, especially among the suburbanites, there has come a demand for a private garage. The owner, with whom efficiency has become a habit, demands more than a mere housing; he aims to have a building that is distinctive in design, often fireproof, durable, and equipped to facilitate the work; his car must be subject to his immediate call.

What is more, the practice of keeping the car at home is more practical and satisfactory now than in former years, since automobiles have been brought to a degree of reliability that makes frequent and extensive repairing unnecessary. The average owner of a car finds it no troublesome task to clean and adjust his own car, and to care for it on his premises. The number of men who operate and look after their own cars is increasing annually. For many, this is not only cheaper, but a more pleasant, arrangement.

The garage, therefore, has become indispensable for the owner's convenience and thus forms quite a necessary adjunct to the home. There are few structures which are so useful or so necessary in which the artistic features are so generally overlooked.

Primarily, the garage is a building intended to shelter the automobile; it may be attractive and well constructed, but if the architectural treatment does not harmonize with the adjacent buildings, the general effect is somewhat displeasing.

Style and Location.

The style of the garage is a matter that may be safely left to the discretion of the architect. The logical location of the garage is at the rear of the house. This is a point, however, that can be discussed only generally, as individual requirements may make it necessary to locate the garage elsewhere on the property. Considerable thought should be given to the selection of the site, and the choice should be influenced by the idea of convenience and accessibility from the road.

The living habits and conditions of a great many people have created a new architectural problem in designing the suburban house with an adjoining garage. To the man building a home of moderate cost this close proximity of his garage is of advantage, in that it places his car at his immediate disposal.

While the minor details of a garage must necessarily differ in individual cases, there are certain essential principles which should be generally observed. The details to be first considered by the owner might be enumerated as follows: First, the selection of an accessible site; second, protection from fire; third, efficiently meeting the needs of the owner; fourth, a convenient arrangement of the various parts.

Danger of Wood Buildings.

It is hardly necessary to say that wood garages are not to be encouraged, as the danger of fire is greatly increased when cars are stored in frame buildings. In addition, there is always danger to adjacent property in case of fire starting within. It is possible to design a garage which shall be absolutely fireproof against danger from within or without.

Where hot water or steam is used for heating purposes, complete isolation of the boiler room from the main part of the building is necessary. The car room should be ventilated both at the bottom and at the top, so as to promote circulation of the air. Venting the car room from the top alone will naturally draw off foul air, but will not remove gasoline fumes.

The rules of the National Board of Fire Underwriters' association make it necessary that the storage tanks for gasoline be placed under ground below the level of the lowest pipe used for filling the tank or delivering the gasoline, and preferably about ten feet away from the building. The tank should be of steel plate, securely riveted and galvanized on the outside, and coated with rust-proof paint, provided with a fill pipe and a vent pipe.

The floor of the car room should be constructed of noncombustible material, with surfaces that will not absorb oil; all angles should be coved to avoid sharp corners for dirt to lodge in. The flushing of the car room will be greatly facilitated in this way. The collection of oil and grease in the corners of the average garage account for much of the disagreeable odors. The entire floor should slope to the drain, provided with a "mud-trap."

Sliding Doors Convenient.

An arrangement of entrance doors to the car room which has found popular favor consists of three sliding doors working on an overhead track, and so arranged that either one of the end doors with the middle door will slide past the other end door; this arrangement allows two-thirds of the width of the entire door opening on one side or the other for a car to enter. Such arrangement is especially suited for a two-car garage where the width for the door opening is limited.

In garages for several cars, turntables are often installed, but where same are used these should combine simplicity, compactness and ease of operation in their own mechanical construction. The space under the turntable must be drained.

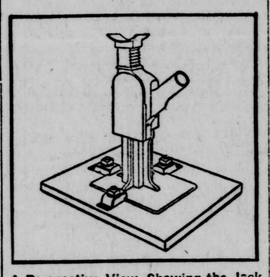

Some other requisites relative to the well-equipped garage include a repair pit, which should have an outlet at the rear, so that in case of fire it would form a means of egress for the mechanic.

LIFTING JACK HELD FIRMLY

No Difficulty in Maintaining True Vertical Position by Use of Newly Invented Device.

The Scientific American, in illustrating and describing a lifting jack, the invention of A. E. Hutchinson and H. Krah of Brooklyn, N. Y., says:

This invention pertains more particularly to lifting jacks especially employed as an accessory of motor vehicles. In jacks of this type difficulty has been experienced in maintaining the jack in true vertical alignment during the lifting operation. In this device a rigid base is provided, capable of removal, and with securing means which may be adjusted with respect to the base.

TO CLEAN MOTOR CYLINDERS

Plan to Keep Oily Water From Forming While Carbon Deposit Is Being Removed.

When the cylinder head of a motor is detached for the purpose of removing the carbon deposit it will be noticed that during the process of scraping the piston, etc., the tapped holes on the top of the cylinder casting soon get full of oily carbon water, etc., causing trouble to remove when it is decided to insert the holding-down set screws, writes R. O. Allen in American Motorist. To obviate this I have used short screws without heads on, but with a screwdriver slot in them, and screw them in flush with the top of the cylinder casting before scraping operations are commenced. After the decarbonizing is completed the grub screws can be removed, when holes will be found free from dirt.

TO FIX BATTERY TERMINALS

Removing With Hammer Endangers Plates, but a "C" Clamp May Be Used With Safety.

Storage battery terminals are often difficult to remove, especially after the battery has been on the car so long that they are corroded. Removing them with a hammer endangers the plates, but a C clamp may be used with safety and with dispatch. Place the clamp with the lip resting against the terminal and the screw against the connector. After a couple of turns with the wrench the cable comes out easily.

Replacing Spark Plugs.

Spark plugs should never be forced into position by severe wrench action. They should seat firmly against a copper asbestos gasket with but little more force than can be applied with the fingers.

Gasoline and Leather Don't Jibe.

Many automobile owners make the mistake of trying to clean leather upholstery with gasoline. This method cracks the leather and destroys the good appearance of most leather.

Lessen Noises.

Leather washers placed beneath the metal washers, not only lessen noise, but give an admirable, elastic compression, which prevents stripped threads in case the bolt is a little small for its work.

Appearances.

One of the things necessary to keep up the appearance of the motorcar is a constant touching up of such parts as lamps, windshield, frame, etc., where black enamel is used.

Immovable Fez.

The director of indigenous arts in Fez, Morocco, told me that he had recently come upon a book written in the fourteenth century and describing Fez as it was at that time. The director compared the statements in the book, item for item, with Fez as it is today—and found the book to be perfectly up-to-date. Reprint it and it would pass very well as a modern account of present-day Fez. The people of Fez are still doing things just as they did them in medieval times.—Willard Price in Christian Herald.

Work Animals in Demand.

Pennsylvania and the states east and north do not produce one-fourth of the work animals they use and are constantly drawing on the Central West for their work stock. Many of these are farm chunks sold directly to eastern farms, while others are horses produced and worked on the farms of the Mississippi valley until five or six years old, then passed to eastern cities, where after six or eight years of service they are resold as sore-footed, city-worn horses to dealers, who sell them at a very nominal figure to farming sections of New England, to work the balance of their days. Such horses represent a complete cycle from farms to cities and back to farms again. It is more true now than in the past, that the good horse or mule pays a profit to the producer, the dealer and ultimate user, while the poor one loses money to all concerned.—Exchange.

Belgian Fishing Industry.

Plans are being drawn for the construction of a large fishing harbor in Zeebrugge, which will not interfere with the working of the port as a commercial center. This is but a part of a project for the establishment of a national fishing industry. At present Belgium is almost entirely dependent on foreign imports, especially of preserved fish. The building of the new harbor will be undertaken by the government, which will also provide for the rapid handling and transportation of goods; private enterprise will establish the necessary cold storage and erect works for making cases and barrels and factories for pickling, drying and preserving fish.
