Mr. Frank Stewart, of New York, spent Monday night in town, visiting with his sister, Mrs. T. L. Day.

Amuse-U Theatre Burned

Last week destruction came to our town and vicinity in the shape of hail. This week the temperature of the destroyer was much higher, as Monday morning, between 2 and 3 o'clock, the alarm of fire was given by Dr. Haymaker, who lives directly opposite the new Amuse-U theatre which was on fire.

All the fire apparatus was soon gathered together and a full force of the local firemen set to work and extinguished the flames before it broke through to the outside. The inside was charred and smoked badly. Several rows of seats were destroyed beyond repair.

The fire broke out on the stage and every condition points to the work of an incendiary, the door near the stage being propped open several inches, with the wind coming from that side of the building, fanning the flames. Fortunately Mr. A. G. Saulsbury, owner of the building, had insurance but of course it will be closed for repairs 30 days or more. A fine piano belonging to Mr. M. K. Newnam, of Denton, got a full share of the flames and to all appearances is a wreck.

Home Gathering

The children of Mrs. T. L. Trice gathered around the family hearth for a little reunion on Sunday when the following were present: Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Trice and family of Preston; Mr. E. B. Blades and family, of Preston; Mr. E. H. Hirs and family, Mr. Hartley Elwanger and family, Mr. R. L. Trice, of Preston; Mr. F. E. Yeoman and daughter, and Mrs. George B. Hemming, of New York who came last Friday, returning to the city on Monday.

Mrs. John Emerson accompanied the Denton orchestra to Hurlock on Wednesday evening where they played at the declamation exercises at the school.

The local office of the Eastern Shore Gas & Electric Co. is sporting a new Ford truck. The truck is much better for the class of work they have than was the roadster they formerly had.

SEED CORN MAGGOT ATTACKS EARLY POTATOES

A very severe outbreak of the seed-corn maggot, accompanied by a fusarium rot, in seed potatoes is prevalent in the Atlantic Coastal Plain, extending from North Carolina to the Eastern Shore of Maryland and practically covering the important early potato regions in these states, according to reports to the Bureau of Entomology, United States Department of Agriculture. Specialists of the Bureau of Plant Industry look upon the situation as a very complicated one, saying that it is evident that while part of the decay followed the damage done by the seed corn maggot a good deal of the damage is traceable to other initial causes, including especially the unusual seasonal conditions that prevailed during the early part of March.

The relative amount of insect or fungus injury varied in different instances. In some the insect damage predominated, while in others it was absent, and fungi seemed to be entirely responsible for the decay. Among the secondary factors that aggravated the conditions were the planting of seed pieces directly on the fertilizer, the fact that sometimes seed was cut and kept in barrels for several days to two weeks before planting, and the use of home-stored northern seed as compared with cold-stored northern seed.

Reports from New Jersey say that the maggot has appeared in large numbers over the southern third of the State and has done damage to pea and bean seed, to lettuce plants, and in some instances to potatoes. The rapid advance of the destruction from North Carolina, through Maryland and Virginia, is thought to indicate the possibility of damage in the early trucking section of Long Island.

WEATHER REPORT

Humid and fairly warm weather of the past week, following a week of warm sunshine, was favorable for growing crops throughout Maryland and Delaware.

The temperature during the first half of the week was slightly below the normal; during the second half, slightly above. Much cloudiness characterized the week, the 31st being the only clear day. The amount of sunshine was deficient. More than the normal rainfall occurred, due to moderate to heavy thunder-showers on the 25th, 28th, and 29th.

Wheat is in good to excellent condition and is heading in the western portion; it has improved and is headed generally in the central and eastern portions. In some Eastern Shore sections the heads are not filling well. Our correspondents at Easton say: "The heads are of fair length, but are not filling well. Crop will be short with most favorable conditions from now until harvest. Late wheat is passing out of bloom. Harvest will begin about June 10th; the normal date is about June 20th."

Rye and oats remain in good to excellent condition, and are growing well; rye is beginning to ripen except in western Maryland.

Corn planting was finished in the western and northern counties, and is within 10 to 25 per cent of completion in the southern counties. Late-planted corn is coming up nicely and making a good stand.

Early potatoes continue in good to excellent condition; they are growing nicely, and beginning to bloom. Peas are maturing in the northern, and picking has begun in the southern counties. Truck and gardens are in fair to good condition.

Pastures are good to excellent.

Harvesting of strawberries continues in the southern and central, and has advanced to the northern counties.

Setting out of tobacco plants is well advanced, and setting out of tomato and sweet potato plants continues.

Elementary School Commencement

The Elementary Graduation exercises of the Denton group of schools will be held in Bryant's Palace Theatre, Wednesday evening, June 8, beginning at 7 o'clock.

The graduates will assemble at the Primary School promptly at that time. The Chautauqua management has agreed to begin the entertainment of the evening a little late in order that the ticket holders and others may attend both the Graduation and the Chautauqua exercises. Patrons of the rural schools as well as of Denton school are cordially invited to attend. No printed invitations are issued.
