BISHOP BERRY URGES CHURCHES TO ADVERTISE

"The daily and weekly newspapers furnish the best mediums for general publicity," Bishop James F. Berry, Philadelphia, says in the Christian Advocate. Bishop Berry is chairman of the executive committee on conservation and advance of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He said:

"The daily and weekly papers furnish the best medium for church publicity. And I do not see why the church should expect to get its advertising free. It includes in its budget various items of expense, such as the minister's salary, the janitor, light, heat, insurance, repairs and often the salary of the organist and some special singers. Why should not advertising be properly added to its list?

"The world, the flesh and the devil do a lot of advertising in these days. It seems to pay the iniquitous combination pretty well. Should the church be less anxious to speak strongly and winsomely to the community?"
