HARDING PRAISES WORK OF THE SPECIAL SESSION

at approximately a quarter of a billion dollars more is appropriated for pension on account of earlier wars.

"In short, half the present total expenditures of the government arises from wars of the past. Similar burdens are imposed upon the taxpayers of other countries, and a well-nigh universal protest against a possible repetition of gigantic conflict gives added to the common hope that the conference in November may lighten the burdens of both armament and taxation, not only for this but for other lands.

"Almost without exception the governments of other countries are faced with great deficits. Their people not only suffer from the general business depression, unemployment, chaotic exchanges and disorder in agricultural prices, but they carry very heavy burdens of taxation, which, nevertheless, is insufficient to meet the current expenditures of the government.

"We must not over-estimate our good fortune and the prudence of our Congress, which permits us to balance revenue and expenditure at a time when deficits are the rule throughout the world. We shall be greatly aided in a policy of progressively reducing expenditure by the budget law. Republican in origin, design, enactment and execution. It was the first of a series of measures placed on the statute books at the present extra session of Congress, but I do not hesitate to say that in ordinary times it alone would have been considered a highly creditable chief product of a year's legislative program. Yet in a time of such legislative activity as the present, it is only one among many measures of the first importance to be enacted.

"It was quickly followed by the enactment of the immigration law, calculated both to limit the inflow of population during a period of depression and to hasten the day when we may effect the true Americanization of all newcomers to our shores.

"The series of measures looking to the amelioration of conditions in the great agricultural industries would, in other times, have constituted a striking legislative product of a year's session. These include the law for the control of the packing industry, the act for the regulation of grain exchanges, and the law for the extension of credits to farmers, through the War Finance Corporation, to enable them to carry their crops until the markets will absorb them.

"The establishment of a Veterans' Bureau insures a consummation of those reforms in caring for our disabled men which were inaugurated by Executive order. We have established peace and are seeking to establish the generous production and profitable exchange of foodstuffs and commodities under the conditions of peace and corrolary assurance of good wages and general employment.

"In order that the Senate Finance Committee may devote its uninterrupted attention to the permanent tariff and revenue measures, Congress wisely determined upon a thirty-day recess. We may confidently hope, I am sure, that after the recess and before the end of the extraordinary session Congress will adopt the tariff and taxation measures, and that along with these it will pass a bill to permit funding the debts owed us by foreign governmetns. This, I hope, will shortly be followed by arrangements under which the debtor countries will begin paying interest on their obligations.

"Most sincerely yours,
WARREN G. HARDING."

Gasolene Price Down 30 Per Cent

Do you know that the average price of gasolene for the entire country is now down to 20.3 cents per gallon? Well, it is, according to a recent survey of wholesale gasolene prices covering the principal cities. On January 1st, 1921, the average price was 28.9 cents. Here is a drop of about 30 per cent to the good of the national pocketbook, writes Sugarman's Indicator.

BETTER BREEDING RESULTS IN MORE WOOL AND MUTTON

Four distinct lines of investigational work are being carried on by the United States Department of Agriculture at the sheep experiment station near Dubois, Idaho. The purposes of these breeding experiments are:

The breeding of the heavy-shearing type of Rambouillet sheep with a desirable mutton form.

A study of the different types of crossbred sheep for the purpose of producing the type best suited to the western ranges.

A comparative study of different methods of utilizing range land for sheep raising, and different methods of supplying water on dry ranges.

The production of crops on arid lands that may be utilized for the winter feeding of sheep.

The Rambouillet flock consists of 800 animals. Efforts are being made to intensify the most desired characteristics, such as smooth, desirable mutton form and body free from wrinkles except about the neck, a face open and free from wool blindness, and a light shrinking, bright, and long-staple fleece.

The crossbred type of sheep is ranges, because the ewes shear heavy gaining in popularity on the western fleeces and produce lambs that mature earlier than fine wool lambs. Two principal types of crossbreds are being studied—the Corriedale, using as the foundation stock individuals that were imported from New Zealand in 1914, and the Columbia, a new breed made by crossing the Lincoln and Rambouillet breeds. The Columbia sheep have been developed at the station from the foundation.

The Columbia has returned the most wool and mutton, while the Corriedale has produced wool somewhat superior in character. The Corriedale has proven its general adaptability to western ranges, but the Columbia has evinced signs of greater robustness and larger size. Lambs of the Columbia breed weigh heavier at weaning time than the Corriedale lambs. The department sheep experts believe there are advantages in both these breeds of sheep that might possibly be combined by crossing them. Such experiments are now in progress, and the early results indicate gratifying returns from these cross-breeding activities.

Following the ceremony there was a reception, after which the bridal pair left for a month's tour in Florida..

For some time Miss Pearson has made her home with her sister in Elberton, and has there a host of good friends who regret her leaving the town.

Minor Musings

Men never object to a man's being a confirmed bachelor. They're generally proud of him.

THE REWARD OF BUYING AT HOME

After all the sending or taking away of our home money is but a matter of thoughtlessness, which the sender possibly construes as thoughtfulness and economy. The above illustration is an example. We are often carried away by the foolish idea that out of town stores can give us better prices, disregarding the fact that our home merchants have a fixed policy to ask only that just percentage of profit that permits the doing of business on a modern scale.

Moral—Reward is sweet when you know you have done the right thing.
