ARMISTICE DAY WILL BE SOLEMN OCCASION WITH FUNERAL OF "UNKNOWN"

The most impressive and solemn military funeral in the history of the United States will be that held in Washington and at Arlington Cemetery, November 11th, the third anniversary of the signing of the armistice This funeral ceremony will mark the burial of an unidentified enlisted man, one of the 4,765,071 who served in the United States armed forces during the world war.

The military honors accorded this unknown soldier will be those prescribed for one of the rank of a general.

The Quartermaster General of the United States army is charged directly with the responsibility of selecting the body from among the unidentified American dead in France. Under orders of the War department, the selection must be made so as to preclude any possibility of future identification as to the name, the rank, organization or service of the unknown dead, or the battlefield upon which he fell. The Quartermaster General will deliver the body to representatives of the American army and navy at the port of Havre, France. At that port it will be taken in charge by a Rear Admiral of the navy and transported in the United States cruiser "Olympia" to the Washington navy yard, where it will arrive on November 9, 1921, after dark. At the Washington navy yard the body will be received by a major general of the United States army and a guard of honor and borne to the United States capitol, where it will lie in state in the rotunda throughout the day of November 10th and until the hour of 9 a. m. November 11th.

Impressive Military Cortege

At that hour the body will be moved to the amphitheatre at the Arlington National Cemetery. The body will be escorted by a battalion of U. S. field artillery, a squadron of U. S. cavalry, a combat regiment of troops composed of one battalion of U. S. infantry, one battalion of U. S. sailors and marines and one battalion of the national guard. The cortege will be headed by the United States Marine band. The pallbearers will consist of eight general officers of the United States army and four admirals of the United States navy. The body itself will be borne on a caisson draped with the American flag. The route of march from the capitol to the cemetery will be lined on both sides by United States regular infantry stationed at an average distance of one man every five yards.

The President of the United States will meet the remains at the amphitheatre at Arlington National Cemetery and deliver an oration in commemoration of America's dead in the World war.

Whole Nation to Be Silent

In accordance with a proclamation yet to be issued by the President of the United States, all industries and activities of all kinds within the continental limits of the United States will cease from 12 o'clock noon to 12:02 P. M., Eastern time, November 11th, during which two minutes all citizens of the United States will be requested to observe silence and to assemble in places of worship to do honor in memory of the dead.

In addition to the military escort the following persons will be invited to attend: (a) All living holders of the Medal of Honor; (b) one representative for every 10,000 enlisted men of the World war, such representatives to be selected by the governors of states and territories; (c) one member of the American Legion from each state and territory; (d) one member from each of the other permanent war veteran societies and organizations; (e) one officer and one enlisted representative from each arm and service of the army and navy.

President to Deliver Oration

At the amphitheater, where the President of the United States will deliver the funeral address, will be the diplomatic corps and representatives of the military and naval forces of every nation represented in Washington with special honor accorded to those who represent the allied nations with which the United States was associated in the World war.

In addition there will be the foreign delegations which will have, by that time, assembled here to attend the conference for the limitation of armaments. It was intended to open that conference at noon November 11th in commemoration of Armistice Day, but this plan has been changed in deference to the ceremonies in honor of the unidentified enlisted soldier, who stands as the symbol and type of all American men who made the supreme sacrifice during the World war.

Firemen to Be Fitted Out

At a special meeting of the Town Commissioners last evening with the firemen, it was decided on to furnish each of the firemen with rubber hat, coat and boots. Ladders will also be purchased and at a later date in all probability a truck will be purchased. Eight firemen were present at the meeting.

COW-TESTING ASSOCIATIONS VARY GREATLY IN SIZE

The practise of testing cows to determine their milk and butter-fat production and feed consumption by means of cow-testing associations has become wide-spread. There are now 452 associations of this kind in the United States, besides many in foreign countries. In most cases each association has one tester and no more cows than can be well handled, but there are some very large ones and some that are much smaller than the standard. The theoretical number of members in a cow-testing association is 26, which makes one member for the tester to visit each working day of the month. A member of such an association is supposed to have not more than 30 cows, as that makes a large day's work. If every member had that number, there would be 780 cows in the association but few of them have that many.

There is no definite relation between the number of members in an association and the number of cows owned. In California there is one association that tests 4,000 cows and another that tests 4,400 and the number of members are respectively 46 and 100. Another in the same state has 86 members and olny 1,439 cows; there are 12 associations in California with over 1,000 cows each. Ordinarily the number of cows in an association runs from 300 to 500, the average for the country being 429. The number of herds averages 24.8 To have more than one tester is a California practice, and one association in that state has three. In contrast to the large associations in California and a few elsewhere, there are some that are quite small. One in Massachusetts has 9 members and 125 cows; another in Kansas has 10 members and 85 cows; and in Michigan there is one with 4 herds and only 45 cows.

The use of co-operative cow-testing associations has resulted in great improvement in the quality of the dairy cows in the localities where they have been organized, by reason of the sifting out of the low producers and the discovery of the good cows that might otherwise have been sacrificed.

The United States Department of Agriculture collects statistics of all the cow-testing associations and issues a directory to all those who are active on July 1 each year. It also assists in the organization of associations, working through the county agent if there is one in the community.

The Neighbor's Chickens

There is no roaming live stock so aggravatingly pestiferous as a neighbor's chickens. A loose hog or cow can be impounded and held for the damage done, but it seems ridiculous to impound a bunch of hens. Yet this is a very practical remedy, when friendly warnings fail. Indiana has passed a law giving one the right to kill trespassing chickens, and other states should copy it. In its absence a very tactful and impressive means was used by one long-suffering gardener. He tied a grain of corn to a string two inches long, which was also tied to a piece of cardboard. The hen swallowed the piece of corn, and getting scared at the cardboard caught in her bill, chased home, where she was caught by her surprised owner. The card read: 'I have been trespassing on John Jones' garden, scratching up his beans. Please keep me home, for the next time I go over there, I'll never see you again."—Farm Life.

REFLECTION

What greater embarassment is there for a father than to have his mistakes reflected upon his innocent son, the son who places all his confidence in his father? The father could have saved himself this discomfort if he would have been more prudent in making his purchases, by patronizing his home town jeweler.
