
FARMERS OF AMERICA

The farmers have builded America, for despite the growth of our cities, Americas agricultrual industry is still the greatest in the world.

As the world has progressed, the farmer has improved his tools and his methods until today with fewer "hands" the farmer produces greater crops than ever before.

Good banking service is one of his requirements. All our facilites are at the disposal of our farmer-patrons.

Prayer is such a solemn, such a sacred attitued of mind, so difficult really to attain, it seems strange when we get into the proper atmosphere we should waste time begging for what we have right at our feet. Why should we pray to be unselfish when all we have to do is to be unselfish, why pray for guidance down a proper pathway when we know just how to travel if we will? We can all be hat we want to be if we really want to be that way. The good Lord has given us that power without the asking. Seems to me the only kind of prayer that's in order is a word for the poor fellow that don't want to be and a determination on our own part to measure up to the job ...ving.

EUROPE SHOULD PAY US AND NOT KEEP UP ARMIES

So Declares Senator Borah in Attack Upon Hatred Engenered by Treaty of Versailles

Washington, Feb. 14—That the European governments which owe money to the United States should be compelled to pay it rather than maintain armies to perpetuate hates under the Treaty of Versailles, from signature to which the country was saved by the Republican party, is urged by Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho. He says:

"I beg to say that under the present policies and under the existing treaties of Europe, no man can foretell at what time these nations will be in a position where they can meet the interest. They are in more financial distress now than three years ago, many of them. If the Versailles treaty could be revised in accordance with principles which would permit Germany to pay and still exist, and not destroy her economically, and if the other nations would reduce their land armaments and their military forces even to a resonable degree— not the rule which some of us would invoke, but even to a reasonable extent—they could meet not only the interest payment but they could meet a portion of the principle.

"The result of the postponement of this interest and the result of the postponement of the debt in its practical workings is to impose upon the American people the maintenance of the military armaments of Europe, for that is what the money is being used for; that is the manner in which it is being expended. If this money were going into the rehabilitation of those countries and was designed and being used for the purpose of buying the things that enable men to produce, to raise crops, and take care of families, no one would care whether the interest was paid this year or five years from now. But I maintain that it is more or less a challenge to the intelligence of the American people to ask them to postpone a demand which, if not met, will be utilized for a purpose not only destructive of the peace of Europe but of the entire world.

"The seriousness of the situation, not only with reference to this matter but others, not only here but elsewhere, is accentuated, because we refuse to look facts in the face. We delude ourselves with theories and placate our souls with anticipations which never happen. We pass laws, or put something down on paper, trusting that by some necromantic power not yet explained these laws and these treaties will start factories open mills, plant and raise crops and bring prosperity. We postpone the payment of debts in order to get a little time to create more. We appropriate millions of the people's money and send it abroad to feed the hungry, knowing full well, if we know anything at all, that under present politics it is but an amelioration for a short time only of the situation. Anyone who argues that we can go into Europe and rehabilitate Europe under present policies and treaties is simply leading the American taxpayer to his utter ruin and in the end not even serving Europe. Any one who urges the postponement of interest or the giving of charity, without insisting upon the adoption of principles and policies wholly different from those which now obtain, is simply deceiving the American people and also misleading the people of Europe to their ultimate undoing.

"I am perfectly aware that I will be met by the suggestion that if the European powers which have signed the treaty want this treaty that it is useless for us to decry against it. I concede it all. But that does not answer the argument that when they come to us asking for relief or asking for time or asking for assistance in rehabilitation it it our most solemn duty to say to them, 'You can have all that is within our power as a prudent people to give, for we recognize both our obligations to humanity and our material interest in the cause, but you must conform your treaties to the law of 'live and let live.' "

NEW NATIONAL MONUMENT PROCLAIMED BY PRESIDENT

By a proclamation of President Harding, signed January 24, a 593-acre tract in the Nevada National Forest was set aside as the Lehman Caves National Monument. For 25 years these caves have been known locally and for some time individuals have been trying to gain control of them, but the action of the Chief Executive retains them safely for all the people and prevents the destruction of the many objects of scenic and scientific value. The area remains a part of the national forest, but the monument can be used for no purposes that interfere with its preservation as a national monument. It is the 11th national monument to be established in a national forest and the first one in Nevada.

The act providing for the preservation of such areas, that of June 8, 1906, authorizes the President, in his discretion, to declare by public proclamation to be national monuments historic landmarks, historic and prehistoric structures, and other objects of historic or scientific interest that are situated upon lands owned or controlled by the Government. The establishment of a monument prevents the removal of any objects of interest except under the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The Lehman Caves are 6 miles west of Baker, White Pine County, Nev., at the base of Mount Wheeler and at an elevation or 7,200 feet. They are in a light gray and white limestone formation on the eastern slope of the mountain. They contain stalactites and stalagmites, columns and galleries of rare beauty that have inspired the people of the locality to apply such fanciful names as The Pearly Gates, The Cypress Swamp, The Portiere, Liberty Column, The Parachutes, Washington's Column, Palace of the Gods, Pygmalion and Galatea (two columns) Cathedral of Rest, Eagles Gate, The Snow Queen of the Underworld, Angel's Wing, Lincoln Column and Niagara Falls.

Residents of the near-by region long ago blasted out an entrance and built stairways. The government will make such improvements as are necessary for the convenience of tourists who wish to visit the monument.

It Pays to Rotate Pastures

To my friends—at least to many of them—it seems that I waste a lot of good fencing material by partitioning off my pasture into various fields. However, experience has taught me that I am able to make my pasture render me better service through being able to do this. For example, I can hold the animals on the rocky areas of the pasture during the cool months of April and May when such areas render good pasturage, reserving for them the richer lowland areas that continue green through the scorching months of July andAgust. I find too, that pastures produce better if allowed to rest now and then. Since I decided to partition my pasture I have experienced no particular shortage of pasturage. Formerly, I have many times been exceedingly short of grass. Since I have as many animals as before, I attribute the change to the partitioning of the pasture.—E. V. L.
