SCOUTS CONSPICUOUS BY ABSENCE AMONG 1400 DELINQUENTS IN COURT

Judge Moses Hartman of St. Louis, Mo., said: If good citizenship as exemplified by Boy Scouts could be inculcated into every youthful member of every community, there would be no need for reformatories.

Of more than 1400 children who have been before me as judge of the juvenile court, two-thirds of whom were boys ranging in age from 8 to 17 inclusive, who had committed infractions of the law varying from the usual boy pranks of breaking windows, turning in false fire alarms, destroying property, stealing bicycles, neighborhood gang fights, crap shooting, and the like, to the commission of murder, 90 per cent of the delinquencies were attributed to improper environment, lack of education and bad company. While in many cases, boys who are merely mischievous, can be corrected by friendly contact and advice, there are many who must be placed in reformatories for correction.

In many instances, boys who have been in corrective institutions have requested admission into Boy Scout troops, and with the constructive educational training received by them they have proved themselves worthy of the association. Out of the 1400 children who have been before me, not one to my recollection was a Boy Scout.

The Boy Scout of today will be a monument of emulation for the future generation and then with proper mental, moral and physical training of boys, there will be no further need of corrective institutions.
