AT LAST, AN AWAKENING

With two committees of investigation formed and ready for action, in connection with the government air service, there seems to be a sudden awakening to the importance of the issue that hitherto has been surrounded by little more than lethargy. A third "committee" probably will come in the nature of some sort of trial court before which Colonel William Mitchell can be hailed to answer for his rebellious attitude toward his technical superiors. Perhaps more definite action may be expected from the third committee than from the other two, which, if past experience be a guide, seem destined to develop into long drawn out "probes" with their usual political embellishments and either red-tape dry rot or headline creating testimony, out of which some individual investigator may carve a political future.

Whatever may be thought of the action of Colonel Mitchell in making his sensational charges, it is fairly clear in the public mind that right or wrong, had the Colonel submitted his thought "through channels" he would have rendered himself little more than a cousin of the far-famed titmouse that tried so vainly to roar against thunder. Mitchell may have violated the canons of military regularity. To permit his charges against his "superiors" to pass unnoticed might open the door to a wholesale right of free speech in the army and navy and create a situation of disciplinary chaos; but the plain fact is that if the Colonel be condemned and punished for his actions he will stand before the public always as a man who wittingly sacrificed himself and his career for what he conceived to be the public interest.

Officers of the army and navy, like some American juries, are not paid to think and above all must remember that their office is not to express themselves. Perhaps out of the muddle the country may obtain a sensible reform in its air service. This will be welcome, even though it be built on the military extinction of the man who always will be credited with having compelled the issue.

ZIEGFELD'S "PRETTY LADIES" DECORATE THE SILVER SHEET

By MILDRED SPAIN

Title: "PRETTY LADIES"
Type: COMEDY-DRAMA.
Directed by MONTA BELL.
Produced by METRO-GOLDWYN.
Presented at the PALACE THEATRE, October 2d and 3d.

One good turn deserves another. After years of glorifying the American girl, Mr. Ziegfeld and his "Follies" comes in for a large portion of glorifying in the movies.

Monta Bell is the bright boy who did it. And he did a neat job!

There's a glamour about the piece that holds one until the fadeout, a fadeout that isn't at all connected with the "Follies" by the way, but with 'earts and love and sich.

The color scenes of the "Follies" and the gorgeous girls are distinctly lovely.

The story, while nothing startling, is at least human.

If you can't go around after seeing this picture and talk of the "Follies" with conviction it isn't Monta Bell's fault. He shows you that American institution backstage, upstage and in my lady's chambers.

One thing about these "Follies" they certainly are generous. Imagine seeing Ann Pennington (played by herself), Will Rogers, Eddie Cantor, the Gallagher-Shean twain, Frances White (none other than Norma Shearer with her hair slicked back), and Frisco all in the same show.

Zasu Pitts is cast as Maggie, the clown, who is an awfully good sort, but somehow doesn't belong with the pretty ladies. Maggie's life is barren of romance until she meets up with Al Cassidy, the drummer, who dedicates "The House Fly Blues" to her.

Selma Larson, the prettiest of the pretty ladies, hates to see Maggie get away with anything, even dumb Al, so she sets her glimmers in his direction.

Zasu Pitts does some effective acting and Tom Moore is just as good as Al. Lilyan Tashman is the hard-hearted Selma and Bernard Randall looks surprisingly like Mr. Ziegfeld, yclept Aaron Savage for story purposes.

Conrad Nagel is Maggie's dream lover and a gal named Gwendolyn Lee is the most decorative member of the chorus.

"Pretty Ladies" is a darned good show. Don't say that I didn't tell you to see it. Palace Theatre, October 2d and 3d. adv
