"PRETTY LADIES"

Gorgeous Reproduction of "Follies" Numbers in Color Plus Goow Story Makes Fine Entertainment

Due largely to Monta Bell's directorial skill, aided by the excellent and sincere performance of Zasu Pitts in a sympathetic human interest role, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production of "Pretty Ladies" is thoroughly enjoyable entertainment.

The story centers in the comedy woman of a "Follies" revue who sees all the pretty ladies in the show with their sweet hearts and dreams of love but never experiences it until love finally comes to her in the person of the drummer in the orchestra. The leading woman tries to vamp him after he is happily married and he does fall from grace on one occasion. His wife won't listen to him or let him explain and acts as if she refused to believe him guilty, finally everything is O. K. again and in secret she prays that it will never happen again.

The fact that the background is that of the "Follies" offered a fine poportunity to build up along this line and Mr. Bell has taken advantage of it. Referring obviously to the "Ziegfeld Follies" Ann Pennington, one of the stars of this noted musical show appears in person and there are impersonations of several of the other principals.

There is to this picture the zest of the peep behind the stage curtain for it is a story of backstage, but after all the big thing for the average audience is the fact that Mr. Bell has introduced a number of spectacular stage numbers with full ensemble and an abundance of "pretty ladies" and the effect has been enhanced many fold by the use of Technicolor. They are simply gorgeous and with the predominance of soft colors are a delight to the eye. This is the finest example of color work we have ever seen, and the appeal of these numbers alone should make the picture a success.

These scenes include a Japanese setting that changes to an Alaskan one covered with snow, a huge chandelier on which the figures are beautiful living women and individual studies of several types of feminine beauty. There is also a novelty scene in which the whole stage represents a kitchen table with shelves, utensils, etc., on the same scale making Zasu Pitts, costumed as a boy, and the other characters appear in perfect proportion.

The way the picture ends is clever and truly unusual and we believe will provide general satisfaction for after all it was the happiest solution of the situation.

In addition to Miss Pitts' fine performance is the good work of Tom Moore in the opposite role and Lilyan Tashman as the vamp, with Norma Shearer and Conrad Nagel scoring in interpolated bits.

We believe that this picture will prove generally pleasing in all classes and that the scenes in color will appeal especially to those who have not had an opportunity to see the "Ziegfeld Follies."

"Pretty Ladies" will be shown Friday and Saturday nights, October 2d and 3d at Redden's Palace Theatre, Denton, Md. adv
