Sallie's Temptations

By Gladys Baker

THE GOLDEN CUP RETURNS TO SALLIE

"I wanted to tell you that you looked like Hsuan-Tung at the dance," he broke the silence.

"You know my knowledge of history," I complained.

He smiled slightly. "You remember the little boy ruler, the last king of the Manchu dynasty who held the fate of China in his youthful hands?"

"Uh-huh" I nodded.

"Well, Sallie, as far as I am concerned, you are still like Hsuan, for my fate is in your slender palms. Do with me what you will, I only know that I love you more, much more than life itself and in deep humility I have come to tell you that my entire happiness depends on whether or not you will be my wife."

He was asking me to be his wife! Oh, why could not this have happened before the intervening heartache and despair?

"But, Curtiss," I answered, "what of Anne? Surely you're not going to throw her aside on account of that scandal at camp?"

"What scandal—and how did you know?" he asked in surprise.

"She told all of us about it at Valeries the other day. But, Curtiss your arms should have been big enough for her and her mistakes too."

"Sallie, precious, you don't understand. It wasn't the scandal that ended things there. It was my love for you. All through the dreary months your face was ever before me and I was haunted by your sweetness and a thousand irresistible characteristics that are a part of your adorable self. When I had thrashed things out in my mind, I regarded your indiscretions in their proper light and knew them for the mischievous pranks of an impulsive child."

"But you would never have broken off with Anne if it had not been for that scandal your brother told you about" I replied. "And oh, Curtiss, I'm so weary of men who idolize a woman as long as they think she has a spotless past and then, when it comes time for truths, are too small of soul to understand."

"But my darling," he interrupted gently, "what has that to do with us?"

"Everything. It was the same fear of scandal that made you willing to put OUR love aside in the first place and turn to Anne."

"But—."

"No, let me finish, please, because I can't marry you, Curtiss, and I want to tell you why. Even if I have to sacrifice my hapiness, it would be better than making the heart of me ashamed of breaking faith with my ideals. You see if you believed in love as I do, you would have loved me in spite of any mistakes I might have made; mistakes that after all have helped to mould me into what I am. Don't you see that you would have loved me because I am I, and hand in hand with your love for me would have gone faith in my ultimate ability to achieve the qualities that you admire."

I looked far out across the waves not wishing to meet his absorbing gaze for I loved him so, and with his eyes gazing deep into mine, I could not have had the strength to tell him that our paths must lie apart.

"God knows, I've been a blundering fool!" he cried with sadness in his voice, "but I don't want you to think that I've ever doubted my love for you once, sweetheart. The thing that drove me from you was not lack of faith but a hide-bound admiration for a certain sort of conduct that I had been reared to expect in the girl who became my wife. But," he continued, "once away, I realized how impossible it was to ignore my heart's desire. I saw too that my warped perspective had been due to the environment of my youth. I came back, Sallie," he reached over and took both my hands, "to beg your forgiveness on my knees. I went to Anne at once and told her of my love for you and released her from our engagement. For to have married her under the circumstances, would have been most unfair. Then," he continued, "I hunted for you and followed you to the Clanceys to ask you to be my wife, but remember how you wouldn't listen, dear?"

"I couldn't let the potatoes burn," I replied looking down at the gleaming sand.

"How big and fine and charitable you've been to those people at the plant," he reminisced, then back to the subject again, "Oh, I don't blame you for not wanting to hear anything I have to say. I have acted the cad. I'm not discounting that."

"You mean by telling Anne that you knew the story about her at the camp?"

Amazement gleamed in his eyes.

"You don't think I'd do a thing like that!" he exclaimed.

"That's what she said."

CHARGES FRAUD IN FLORIDA LAND SALE

The investigation service of the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation in the current issue of the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation News, official publication of that organization, has issued a warning to its members against alleged frauds in connection with some Florida land sales, claiming that "improved" lots are under water and that Federal warrants have been issued, charging the use of mails with intent to defraud, against officers of one land company. It is also charged that between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000 of investors' money is tied up in the company.

The article in question says further: "This tells the story of activities of a group of former promoters of wildcat oil companies who used their sucker lists to solicit thousands of prospects through the mails. The Florida land boom was their bait. As a result, over $1,000,000 of savings are lost.

"Many promoters are soliciting Ohio citizens through the mails. Our advice is, before YOU INVEST—INVESTIGATE. Don't be lured by rosy dreams and fantastic promises to send your money into far-off fields, possibly never to return. When anyone asks you to invest in real estate or real estate securities anywhere, ask them two questions: 'What is your record?' 'Has your past proved so unmistakably your ability and integrity as to make your recommendations worthy of being believed in and relied on?' And to both of these questions demand an affirmative answer. As a still further precaution consult your banker or Building and Loan secretary."

ELKTON BUS BURNED

The bus of the Shore Transit Co. runing between Chestertown and Elkton took fire near Galena, Thursday morning, en route to Chestertown and was completely destroyed. There were no passengers. This bus was owned by A. J. Hammer and driven by Malcolm Bailey. Mr. Bailey says the engine back-fired lifting the hood of the engine off and in a moment the whole machine was enveloped in flames. He jumped and saved himself from being burned. The bus was insured for $1200.

WORLD SERIES— The Washington Senators Say, "Try and Get It" By A. B. CHAPIN

WOMAN

Yes,
She occasionally paints a little,
And powders now and then,
And wears funny clothes,
And like the vamp pictures
At the movies,
And all that,
But
She is the official information bureau
For the whole family.
She knows more
In five minutes
Than her good husband
Will ever find out
She does all the heavy thinking
For the outfit,
Born to the purple
Ardently yearning to have a mink coat
And a limousine,
And a flock of servants,
And go to the city every week end,
And dance in the crystal ball room—
Ardently yearning
For all these things,
And more like 'em.
She makes rompers for the kids,
And washes Friend Husband's silk shirts,
And cooks
And sweeps
And stews
And bakes,
And cleans house,
And entertains the ladies' aid,
And all her husband's relations,
And manages
In spite of all she has to do,
To keep a little flower garden,
And read a book on uplift,
And keep nine serial magazine stories straight in her head,
And look sweet and competent,
And be cheerful,
And never let anybody know
That she is dying
Of boredom.
And then when she goes
And registers, and the man
Asks "Vocation, please?"
And she says, "House wife,"
H puts down
"NONE!!"

WASHINGTON COLLEGE TO ISSUE QUARTERLY

At the annual meeting of the Alumni Association of Washington College last June is was unanimously decided to publish an alumni quarterly during the year 1925-1926.

Acting upon this decision Dean J. S. William Jones, of the college faculty and secretary-treasurer of the Alumni Association, has been at work upon plans for the publication of the paper during the summer, and has about completed details.

The paper will be a thirty-page magazine and will contain contributed articles of interest by the president and members of the faculty, as well as by prominent alumni in all parts of the world.

It will cost about $500 to produce the paper for the four issues, the expense of which will be met through subscriptions from members of the alumni association and friends of the college.

It will have a competent editorial staff, and will be the third publication to be issued by the college. The first issue will appear about December 1.

"I've often heard the wealthy Mr. Jones is very democratic, but I'll be durned if he looks like a politician to me."

The Judge's Josh

Your Birthday
Is it this week?

October 4-10

If you were born during October 4-10th, you have an extremely original mind, and your ideas are too far advanced to permit you to remain content in subordinate places. You have a capacity for doing great things—if you are permitted to work your own way. But if your ideas must be subordinated you are unhappy. You do not want to waste time over small details. You want to do the big things.

Your perceptive faculties are strongly marked and your habit of being guided by intuition and acting on impulses makes you quick of speech and decisive in action.

The faults of people born under these dates are few. They are inclined to be temperamental—their moods changing suddenly from hopefulness to melancholy. They are impatient, and have a habit of voicing opinions and advice when they are not asked for.

The arts and sciences are of the greatest interest to people born under these dates, and both men and women acquire proficiency in such pursuits when they devote their energies in those directions. The women make excellent buyers, office executives, and writers. The men become scientists, philosophers, artists, and politicians.
