The Ever-Present of the Soul.

The Professor.—"The Present is an age of doubt, and disbelief, and darkness, out of which shall arise a clear and bright Hereafter. In the second part of Goethe's Faust there is a grand and striking scene, where in the classical Walpurgel Night, on the Pharsallan Plains, the mocking Mephistopheles sits down between the solemn antique sphinxes, and boldly questions them, and reads their riddles. The red light of innumerable watch-fires glares around about, and shines upon the terrible face of the archscoffer, while on either side, severe, majestic, solemnly serene, we behold the gigantic forms of the children of Chimaera, half-buried in the earth, their wild eyes gazing fixedly, as if, they heard thro' the midnight the swift-rushing wings of the Stymphalides, striving to outstrip the speed of Alcides' arrows! Angry Griffins are near them; and not far off are Sirens, singing their wondrous songs from the rocking branches of the willow-trees!—Even thus does a scoffing and unbelieving Present sit down between an unknown Future and a too-believing Past, and question and challenge the gigantic forms of Faith, half-buried in the sands of Time, and gazing forward steadfastly into the night, whilst sounds of anger and voices of delight alternate, vex and soothe the ear of man! But the time will come when the soul of man shall return again, childlike and trustful to its faith in God, and look God in the face and die; for it is an old saying, full of deep mysterious meaning, that he must die who hath looked upon God. And this is the fate of the soul, that it should die continually. No sooner here on earth does it awake to its peculiar being than it struggles to behold and comprehend the Spirit of Life. By the first dim twilight of its existence it beholds this spirit, is pervaded by its energies, is quick and creative like the spirit, and yet slumbers away into death after having seen it. But the image it has seen remains; in the eternal procreation, as a homogeneal existence, is again renewed; and the seeming death, from moment to moment, becomes the source of kind after kind of existences in ever-ascending series. The soul aspires ever onward to love and to behold. It sees the image perfect in the brightening twilight of the dawn, in the ever-rising sun. It sleeps again, dying in the clearer vision; but the image seen remains as a permanent kind; and the slumberer awakes anew and ever higher after its own image, till at length, in the full blaze of Loonday, a being comes forth which, like the eagle, can behold the sun and die not. Then both live on, even when this bodily element, the mist and vapor through which the young eagle gazed, dissolves and falls to earth."

Flemming.—"I am not sure that I understand you; but if I do you mean to say that, as the body continually changes and takes unto itself new properties, and is not the same to-day as yesterday, so likewise the soul lays aside its idiosyncrasies and is changed by acquiring new powers, and thus may be said to die. And hence, properly speaking, the soul lives always in the present, and has, and can have, no future; for the future becomes the present, and the soul that then lives in me is a higher and more perfect soul, and so onward forevermore."

The Professor.—"This earthly life, when seen hereafter from heaven, will seem like an hour passed long ago, and dimly remembered; that long, laborious life, full of joys and sorrows as it is, it will then have dwindled down to a mere point, hardly visible to the far-reaching ken of the disembodied spirit. But the spirit itself soars onward. And thus death is neither an end nor a beginning. It is a transition, not from one existence to another, but from one state of existence to another. No link is broken in the chain of being; any more than in passing from infancy to manhood, from manhood to old age. There are seasons of reverie and deep abstraction, which seem to me analogous to death. The soul gradually loses its consciousness of what is passing around it, and takes no longer cognizance of objects that are near. It seems for the moment to have dissolved its connections with the body. It has passed, as it were into another state of being. It lives in another world. It has flown over lands and seas; and holds communion with those it loves, in distant regions of the earth and the more distant heaven. It sees familiar faces and hears beloved voices which to the bodily senses are no longer visible and audible. And this, likewise, is death; save that, when we die, the soul returns no more to the dwelling it has left.—Longfellow's "Hyperion."

WHERE THE PEOPLE LIVE.—Only a small portion of them live in America.—According to the latest figures, the entire population of the whole American continent is but a trifle over eighty-five and a half millions, while the Russian Empire alone contains eighty-six and a half millions. The population of Africa is nearly two hundred millions; of Europe over three hundred and nine millions; while Asia the cradle of the human race, has the enormous number of 824,548,500 inhabitants.

The entire population of the globe is 1,423,916,800. It is estimated that two thousand human beings die every hour.—At that rate—with nothing to offset the loss—it would not take a century to depopulate the whole earth. But it is estimated that about twenty-three hundred human beings are born every hour which makes up the loss and gives a net gain of over two and a half millions a year.

'Doctor,' said a lady, 'I want you to prescribe for me.' 'There is nothing the matter, madam,' said the doctor, after feeling her pulse; 'you only need rest.' 'Now doctor, just look at my tongue,' she persisted. 'Just look at it—look at it! Now say, what does that need?' 'I think that needs rest, too,' replied the doctor.

To the Sick.

A great many are now suffering with cold, coughs, and other ailments, which, if not promptly attended to, may result in an incurable disease. For all diseases of the throat, breast and lungs, bronchial or asthmatic affections, Dr. SWAYNE'S COMPOUND SYRUP OF WILD CHERRY is a pleasant and certain cure. The oldest and best remedy. It promotes expectoration, and removes all diseased matter which obstructs the lungs, the ulceration is healed, and the sufferer restored to perfect health. It is nourishing and strengthening, and for disturbed rest at night, its use will give sweet repose. If the bowels are costive, or liver disordered, take at first a few doses of Swayne's Tar and Sarsaparilla Pills, which will evacuate the bowels, and is of vital importance, relieve the congested liver, and remove all billiousness. Then follow with Swayne's Wild Cherry Syrup, and health, strength and happiness is sure to be the result

1877 THE SUN, BALTIMORE, MD. 1877

The Sun, from the geographical position occupied by Baltimore and its proximity to the National Capital, presents unusual advantages to all classes of readers, not only in the city of its publication, but in the surrounding States. It is emphatically a newspaper, and its reputation has been built up by the acknowledged excellence and variety of its news, both local and general. From its fairness and impartiality in discussing public questions, its circulation extends among men of all political parties, and has become, from the thoroughness of its information on all current subjects engaging popular attention, the favorite paper of the people. Everything worthy of special notice or record in the State of Maryland, the District of Columbia, and the States adjacent, will be found from day to day in a compact and readable form in its columns. During the session of Congress it gives special attention to the subjects under discussion, the introduction of important bills, and the pith of the debates. Its special correspondence embraces not only daily but letters and telegrams from Washington, but covers all the most prominent points in the Union, from San Francisco to New York, and the Eastern cities beyond. Its foreign news is the very latest received from day to day by cable. In its Commercial and Financial Departments the utmost pains are taken to secure perfect accuracy in the quotations, the fluctuations in all classes of public securities being carefully noted. Special attention is also given to the Breadstuff and Provision markets and particularly to the current prices each day, not only in Baltimore, but in other cities of the Union and abroad. For all the principal matters that enter into the business of the country it may be consulted with safety, both by producers and dealers But aside from its political, financial and commercial features, the Sun has an established reputation as a family paper. As such the information it imparts, in the way of general news, is of interest to all classes of readers, nothing being admitted into its pages that may not be read by any member of the household. In religion its position is non-sectarian, with charity towards all; and in local as in federal affairs it regards an honest and economical administration, dealing justly by the people and respecting their rights, to be paramount to all other considerations. To those who desire a first class newspaper, up to the times, and sparing no expense to keep it so. The Sun will recommend itself; while to advertisers it offers the advantages of a large and widely extended circulation among all classes of readers
