Beware of Cards.

Of course no young man who reads this expects ever to live the life of a gambler. Whatever danger there may be to others, every one feels that as regards this he is perfectly safe.

But the inexperienced have no conception of the ease with which this habit of gambling is contracted, nor of the tremendous hold which, when once formed, it has of its victim. All that is requisite is, first, the practice of playing "for the fun of the thing," and then the habitual staking of small sums, "just to give interest to the game.' Soon the fondness for play increases, and the small sums are found insufficient to afford the same zest they did at first; so they have to be increased.

A little longer and late hours are given to play; business is neglected; the homely avocations of life have become tame and insipid in comparison; the craving for unnatural excitement increases: the victim is a confirmed gambler!

And what is it to be a confirmed gambler? It is one of the most dreadful fates that can befall a man. There is nothing he will not sacrifice, if need be, to his ruling passion. Property, name, kindred, friends—all these will he give up, sooner than play.

Indeed, he feels that he cannot give that up; and we are assured by those who have the best opportunities for observation that such a thing as a permanently reformed gambler is almost, if not wholly unknown.

A man in this city who had married a superior woman, had become addicted to play. He had a hundred thousand dollars on hand when he was urged by a friend who took an interest in his welfare, to forsake his evil ways, take this sum of money, and go to Italy, where, upon the interest of it, he could support his family and educate his children. Some time afterward this conversation, the parties met. "I have been thinking over what you said,' remarked the gambler, "and I cannot do it. I cannot give up the passion for play.

Wife, children and all had to take the risk of a precarious support, and the certainty of an unenviable standing in the community, because in the husband and father the confirmed habit of gambling ruled supreme, and controlled his whole being.

The victims of this terrible habit are more numerous than is generally supposed. They abound in all occupations and in all ranks of life. They enjoy, briefly, an intense, maddening excitement at the cost of all that is noble in manhood, and their hours of sunshine are followed by days and years of bitterness and grief.

WHEN DARK COMES.—A little girl sat, at twilight, in her sick mother's room, busily thinking. All day she had been full of fun and noise, and she had many times worried her poor tired mother.

"Ma," said the little girl, "what do you suppose makes me get over my mischief and begin to get good, just about this time every night?"

"I do not know, dear. Can you tell?"

"Well, I guess it's because this is when the dark comes. You know I am a little afraid of that. And then, ma, I begin to think of the naughty things I've done to grieve you, and that perhaps you might die before morning; and so I begin to act good."

"Oh!" thought I, "how many of us wait till 'the dark comes,' in the form of sickness, or sorrow, or trouble of some kind before we begin to act good! How much better to be good while we are enjoying life's bright sunshine! and then 'when the dark comes,' as it will, in a measure, to all, we shall be ready to meet it without fear."—Wellspring.

A WOMAN being counted out, the other morning, after a debate on the question, "Who shall rise and build the fire?" got up and split her husband's wooden leg into kindling wood, and broiled his steak with it. It made him so mad that he got hold of her false teeth and bit the dog with them. She cried until she had a fit of hysterics, and flipped out his glass eye, and climbed upon the bed-post, and waxed the glaring eye to the ceiling with a guid of chewing gum. Then he took her wisp of false hair and tied it to a stick, and began whitewashing the kitchen with it. Then she started off to obtain a divorce, but the judge decided that he couldn't grant a divorce unless there were two parties to the suit and there was hardly enough left of them to make one.

DON'T HURRY, GIRLS.—One of the crying evils of these times is the tendency and disposition of girls to get through girlhood hurriedly and get into womanhood, or rather into young ladyhood, without waiting to enjoy the beautiful season of girl-hood. Speaking on this point, Bishop Morris says, "Wait, patiently, my children, through the whole period of your girlhood. Go not after womanhood, let it come to you. Keep out of public view. Cultivate retirement and modesty. The cares and responsibilities of life will come soon enough.—When they come, you will meet them, I trust, as all women should. But oh, be not so unwise as to throw away your girlhood. Rob not yourself of this beautiful season, which, wisely spent, will brighten all your future life.

THERE are thirteen Russian merchantmen now lying in American ports, all afraid to venture out since war has been declared. Two ships and two barks are at New York, and about the same number of each kind at Baltimore, and three at Philadelphia.—Those in Baltimore arrived early in April, and have been instructed by cable from Russia not to move without further orders. As Russia does not indemnify for losses of ship owners, they have to lie idle or insure at war risks, which sometimes reach forty or fifty per cent.
