We know the greatest enemy of peach culture—the Jersey and is made we will be to select. there is no good reason why this should be so. Here and there scat. tered widely apart throughout the country we know farmers who make excellent butter, which would be classed first quality in the market and next door to those neighbors who make trash unfit for food. On the counters of country stores may any day be seen rolls of butter most widely different in color, flavor and texture. One farmer is careful and cleanly, and his wife keeps her dairy sweet and her pails and pans perfectly pure: another keeps a foul stable, milks in an uncleanly fash ion, has musty feed and foul water for his cows, while his wife is equal. ly careless in her dairy.
