AN INJURED COLT.

Please advise me, through the American Farmer, how to treat a colt that had his left hind leg injured, about one month ago, by being backed over a stump while geared to the wagon.

The injury is between the knee and pastern, on the outside, and causes the leg to remain swollen considerably at this point. The leg was slightly cut at two or three places on the inside and back part, between the knee and pastern, but so slightly as to need no treatment.

About mid-way between the knee and pastern on the outside of the leg, the appearance of a swelling similar to a wind gall was the first evidence of any injury on that side of the leg. The swelling increased after a week or ten days, going both upward and downward, extending from knee to pastern. The affected parts were bathed for a few days in weakly without producing any change.

Jadwin's liniment was next applied, three times a day for three or four days, with same results. When the colt is used or exercised the swelling diminishes some, but does not leave entirely, and standing in the stall over night brings it back as before. The animal shows no sign of pain by limping or otherwise, and there does not seem to be much fever in the affected parts. Advice through the Veterinary Department of the Farmer as to its proper treatment and cure will greatly oblige.

REPLY.

As this case is deserving of special interest and attention, I will first explain its nature and then give instructions for treatment. I consider that the colt suffers from partial rupture of the sheath of the back tendons--in horse language termed "breakdown."

Considering the age of the animal injured, I think it possible to greatly relieve this weakness, if not to effect an entire cure. I would recommend the following treatment: Put the colt in a good box stall, large enough for him to walk around in. Bathe the leg with warm water once a day for seven days, after each application applying the following solution:

Tincture arnica, 2 ounces; tincture acetic acid, 1 ounce; oil of origanum, 2 drachms; distilled water, 1 pint.

After this treatment has been pursued for the above mentioned length of time, stop the water over the swelling and apply this blister:

Bichloride of mercury, 1 drachm; oil of origanum, 1 drachm; hard, 1 ounce.

Be careful to tie the horse's head up for twenty-four hours after the application of the blister, and repeat the application in two weeks if necessary.

HUMOROUS.

"A fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind"--but not when the fellow's feeling is for your pocketbook.

At the polls, recently, it was easy to tell who voted "yes" on the license question by the appearance of his "no's."

A poet has written a song called "Bury me Near the Old Home." If he has accommodating neighbors his request will be granted without waiting for him to go through the usual formula of dying; especially if he sings his own songs.
