I believe that advertising pays. When one has goods that he wants to sell the best way to accomplish it is to let the people know what he has; then let the goods be examined and if the prices suit they must go. My aim shall be to keep my stock always complete and prices always low, and I invite an inspection of my goods.

KNOW THYSELF.

BULK IN THE MANURE HEAP.

Quantity is all the farmer seems to desire in his manure heap. He does not stop to consider the quality nor value, but judges it by the number of cubic feet it occupies. And yet there is as much variation in the composition of the manure in the farm heaps as there is in the different grades of animals on a farm. Take a ton of well-rotted manure, as it is usually found on every farm, and it will consist of about 550 pounds of organic matter. This is, in round numbers, about 600 pounds of dry matter. The remaining 1400 pounds is water. And to still further reduce the actual value, as far as the smallest amount will demonstrate, there is much valueless matter in the dry 600 pounds, for of that amount only 12 pounds are potash, 8 pounds phosphoric acid and 13 pounds nitrogen, giving a total of only 33 pounds. This shows badly against the farmer's prospects and hopes from his ton of well-rotted barnyard manure; but nevertheless this conclusion has been arrived at only after careful experiments and tests.

And to still further detract from the value of the heap, it is to be observed that the above figures only apply to good manure—that has been well composted, protected and managed. In manure heaps that have been exposed to the heat of the sun and drenching rains the amount of mineral matter is still less. The twelve pounds of actual potash are valued at $1, the phosphoric acid at 80 cents and the nitrogen at about $2.25—total value of the ton of barnyard manure, $4.05. These prices, of course, fluctuate, and may be at times higher or lower. The actual potash is derived, in commercial salts, from the sulphate and muriate, the acids in the salts merely adding to the bulk, but, being combined with the potash, must be used with it. So with phosphoric acid and nitrogen.

There is in the manure heap, however, small proportions of matter that are not sold among commercial fertilizers, such a magnesia, iron, common salt and carbon. The latter is in the manure heap in good quantity, but is not considered valuable. Chlorine is bought in the muriate of potash, and even in lime we find magnesia. The iron is not desired. But these articles are not sold as such in the usual commercial fertilizers, and farmers do not expect to find them there.

Then there are many compounds formed by the vegetable acids in the manure heap entirely unknown. A constant movement of the particles is in progress therein, and new compounds are formed daily. Still, if the proper ingredients are not added to the heap for the manufacture of first-class manure no chemical process can create it. The true value and efficiency of the manure are derived from that which the farmer adds to it. It is a mistake to suppose that anything will make good manure. Anything will increase the bulk and assist in retaining the nutritive qualities, but after bulk has been acquired we must expend labor to haul it the fields.

The preservation of manure is one of the most important matters for the farmer's attention. It is usually the method with him to haul everything to the barnyard to be trampled by cattle, and there remain until it is ready to be heaped. After being heaped he thinks he has done his duty until ready to haul it out. During this interval a a few drenching rains will deprive it of all that is valuable, and the scorching rays of the sun will assist in this deteriorating process. All manure then should be kept under shelter—not a very tight, close roof but in such manner as to protect it against being drenched. A few leaks here and there that will admit some water are beneficial, care being required to guard against leaching only. As to exposure to the sun, that should never be done under any circumstances.

The black, disagreeable stuff that flows away in the drains after heavy rains carries off the wealth of the farmer with it, leaving the dross for him to haul to the fields. But as the bulk still remains the farmer contents himself with the reflection that he has added so many loads of manure to his fields, and when harvest arrives he is ready to declare that farming does not pay. He has but to guard against loss in his management, and half the battle is won. Protect your manure heap, for it is your bank that contains the wealth of the farm.—Philadelphia Record.

STATEMENT UNDER OATH.

"I have been afflicted for twenty years with an obstinate skin disease, called by some M. D.'s Psoriasis, and others Leprosy, commencing on my scalp, and, in spite of all I could do, with the help of the most skilful doctors, it slowly but surely extended until a year ago this winter it covered my entire person in form of dry scales. For the last three years I have been unable to do any labor, and suffering intensely all the time. Every morning there could be nearly a dustpanful of scales taken from the sheet on my bed, some of them half as large as the envelope containing this letter. In the latter part of the winter my skin commenced cracking open. I tried everything, almost, that could be thought of, without any relief. The 12th of June I started West, in hopes I could reach the Hot Springs. I reached Detroit, and was so low I thought I should have to go to the hospital, but finally got as far as Lansing, Mich., where I had a sister living. One Dr. —— treated me about two weeks, but did me no good. All thought I had but a short time to live. I earnestly prayed to die. Cracked through the skin all over my back, across my ribs, arms, hands, limbs, feet badly swollen, toe nails came off, finger nails dead and hard as bone, hair dead, dry and lifeless as old straw. Oh, my God! how I did suffer!

"My sister, Mrs. E. H. Davis, had a small part of a box of Cuticura in the house. She wouldn't give up; said 'We will try Cuticura.' Some was applied on one hand and arm. Eureka! there was relief; stepped the terrible burning sensation from the word go. They immediately got the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier), Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures). I commenced by taking one tablespoonful of Resolvent three times a day, after meals; had a bath once a day, water about blood heat; used Cuticura Soap freely; applied Cuticura morning and evening. Result, returned to my home in just six weeks from the time I left, and my skin as smooth as this sheet of paper.
