TOO LITTLE STOCK.

A careful estimate of the animal drain upon the farm, through rearing and selling of live stock, would show to any one that our farm animals are remarkable in the matter of their usefulness and manufacturers of fertilizing material.

It would be an interesting experiment to most men, to set apart a piece of ground--say pasture or meadow, on high land, even on a hill side, upon which the droppings of a single animal should be distributed, carefully providing against too free washing--and note the productiveness of that surface as compared with others of like extent not so treated.

THE TROUBLES OF LOVE.

"You have broken my heart, Vivian."

It was a fair-haired girl who spoke these words, and as they came from her lips Vivian Maloney, the young man to whom they were addressed, leaned tenderly over her and strove to kiss away the tears that were welling up in her beautiful, dreamy, brown eyes.

"I do not blame you," she continued in a broken voice. "It was whom you will one day wed is fair to look upon, and when her warm kisses melt upon your lips it is not strange that you forget all else but that she would gladly be your wife and that her father owns a coal yard. But I love you with a mad, deathless passion that will burn out my life in the intensity of its flame. You have won my Scandinavian affections unwittingly, but you have won them all the same. In the years that are to come, Vivian, when your children are playing at your knee and life seems like a fair dream, you will sometimes think of me--sometimes feel a tender thought lie in your heart for the little flaxen-haired girl that knew no happiness so great as to hear your voice and see the gleam of the matinee tickets in your vest pocket? Tell me this, and when the leaves are turned beyond the blighting touch of Autumn's chilly hand, and I shall have been put away forever in the little dell beyond the meadows, you will lead to the altar a happy bride and never know the sorrow I have felt."

"By your bright moon I swear," said Vivian, taking another kiss on the fly, "that your memory shall ever be enshrined in my heart. Though my life shall be one of tempest and storm, or a succession of sunny days, I shall always remember that you were my first and my only love."
