The Decline of the Lover.

Truly a delicate subject to write about, yet for those who have felt the tender passion, as well as for those who portray it on the mimic stage, some goodly counsel is furnished by Josephine Pollard in Our Continent Here is the lesson:

"'All the world's a stage,' and love is the axis upon which the drama and the universe revolve. It would seem as if but little study were required to express the most natural passion of the human heart, but experience and observation prove that few are masters in the mighty art, and the most diligent application may not insure the applause and appreciation so ardently sought by the stage lover.

"Young maidens who aspire to the role of Juliet or Ophelia or the Lady of Lyons may be conscious of their own ability to distinguish themselves, but of what avail are Juliet's sighs and amorous glances if Romeo is not perfect in his part, and does not acquit himself so that the audience shall say with inward satisfaction, 'Now that was like a lover!'

"The whole beauty and intensity of Ophelia's misery and Pauline's scorn depend on the skill and tact of the lover to apprehend the situation, and lead it up to the grandly momentous issue. A look, a gesture, is not lost upon the audience, and there is a charm in refined love-making that has an irresistible influence upon old and young, the educated and the ignorant.

"There be lovers in these days. Ah, yes, hosts of them. But such lovers! They study their part, they play it well—that is, according to the book—but there is no spontaneity, no readiness to catch the humor of the maid, no response to her capricious or exacting moods.

"'The wretch is centered all on self.'

"Statuesque lovers may do for waxwork exhibitions, but where the real thing is required, where burning words demand a corresponding flame, the eyes of the audience are upon the lover and not a sigh or a glance escapes them. Therefore he who undertakes the role of a lover should assume to possess the soul of a lover, for in that way only can he make himself personally and professionally attractive. He who woos well wins well, on and off the stage.

"'Love is the art of hearts and heart of arts. Conjunctive looks and interjectional sighs are its vocabulary's greater half.'"

COURTSHIP IN CHURCH:—One of the most diffident men I ever knew courted his wife while they sat in church—her hymnbook serving as a medium of converse. He was turning the leaves of the book, when suddenly these lines met his eye, which he marked with a pencil and handed her to read:

'Tis thee I love—for thee alone
I shed my tears and make my groan;
Where'er I am, where'er I move,
I meet the object of my love.

The hymn-book was presently handed back to him, with a leaf turned down and these lines designated with pencil mark:

I yield, I yield, I yield,
I can hold out no more.

With a heart bounding with joy the youth continned to look over the volume, until he found the appropriate expression of his feelings:

—When shall it be,
That I shall find my heaven in thee—
The fullness of the promise prove
The pledge of thy eternal love?

To which in a moment he received the response, indicated as before, by the turned leaf and the pencil mark:

Soon as thou wilt.

This unique courtship then ended, by the enraptured youth marking the passage:

O happy day that fixed my choice
On thee—

Garfield's Funeral Refreshments.

The committee appointed to audit the expenses of the Congressional delegation which attended the funeral of the late President is reported to be in a state of great anxiety lest some pertinacious member of the House should call for an itemized account of expenditures of trip from Washington to Cleveland. The total expense incurred by members of the House officially and unofficially present at the funeral is about seven thousand dollars, and of this it is said that no less than seventeen hundred dollars was paid for champagne, brandy, whisky, cigars and lunch. It is alleged that three hundred dollars is charged for cocktails alone and the "lunch" may be presumed to have formed but an infinitesimal part of the total expense.

At the ordinary dealers' rates the amount named would pay for about forty cases of champagne, ten gallons of choice brandy, thirty gallons of Bourbon "cold tea," two thousand cocktails and twenty-five hundred imported cigars, and the fact that this list of refreshments or its equivalent was disposed of by a comparatively limited number of Congressmen proves either that the carrying capacity of our representatives is much greater than of ordinary men or that the journey to Cleveland was a prolonged and disreputable debauch.

Representatives of the people in State and national positions have too long been accustomed to make official funerals the occasions for boisterous and unseemlg junketing. The press and the people are always reluctant to criticise any bad taste or improper behavior at such times, when public sorrow more or less profound, and respect for the memory of the dead as well as for the feelings of the living require not only decency but dignity on the part of all who assist at the ceremonies. But there is a class of maudlin mourners who abuse the considerations of the public on such occasions and a thorough showing up would do much to improve the deportment of men whose position should forbid such indulgences. It is to be hoped that some member of the House will show the moral courage to demand the rendering of the items in the matter the "refreshments" for the Garfield funeral.—Philadelphia Times.
