of the tramp that the girl was enabled to escape from him and run to a neighbor's assistance. Little Sut realized that there was work for him to do. The screams which came from the house plainly indicated that the one man was not the only enemy on the place, and he shot little Sut rushed in to find another tramp on the point of overcoming Mrs. Pitkins and the other daughter in a fierce struggle, in which he had almost torn their clothing off. The noise that little Sut made and the vigorous fusillade of potatoes that he hurled at the tramp so disconcerted him that it allowed the two women a chance to escape and lock themselves in a room upstairs. Poor little Sut and his dog were left out to contend with the two enraged tramps; the fight was uneven and short, the dog driven from the field, and little Sut alone stood at bay. Suddenly one of the tramps, who had been keeping an eye open for a chance to approach the farmer to whose house the other daughter had fled, and giving the alarm the two desperadoes rapidly made their escape to the thick woods near by.

Man as a Housekeeper. Man is a creature that has always elicited our unqualified admiration; he is in many capacities useful, and by a judicious arrangement of blue cloth and brass buttons, can often be rendered to a certain degree ornamental. In the sphere of action, for which his many estimable characteristics have qualified him, we accept him without a murmur; but when it comes to having him foisted upon us as a housekeeper, we indignantly reject him. We have wintered and summered him in that capacity, and he is an ignominious failure. For the ornamental part of housekeeping, he is peculiarly unfitted; his soul is closed and his vision dim to the truly beautiful. He seems bric-a-brac, and is not susceptible to the ennobling and refining influence of that home-angel, the tidy. If there were fifteen tidies on one chair he would manage to get ten under him and get up with the rest on his back. He is a sworn enemy to all decorative art, and if not watched he pulls to bed on the pillow shams. He will get the bed-clothes out by the roots, when he gets up; he leaves water in the wash-bowls, and hangs the towel on the floor. He makes a hatrack of the piano and expects to find his slippers just where he left them last winter. His idea of comfort is to throw open every door and window in the house, and to become arrangement of lights and shades, his mind is a perfect blank. He was never known to make a knot in a towel and drive flies out of the room, and if he does not see what he wants the minute he opens the bureau drawer, he knows it is not there, and you cannot convince him to the contrary. He lacks adroitness, and always drags to sit in. His mind is not nimble at taking hints. We have seen a man help himself to the last slice of cake, with company present, and unobtrusively call for more, notwithstanding his wife was kicking him under the table and winking at him over it. It will readily be seen that he is, by nature and education, totally disqualified to act as goddess of the home. His occasional presence is necessary to have him patronize the deserving institution three times a day, and it looks well to have him sitting around in the evenings; but it would never do to leave him in charge of the dearest spot on earth. He would bankrupt domestic bliss in a week. Let all who are interested in the preservation and maintenance of the fire-side, humbly petition a few able-bodied, industrious women to continue the time-honored and laudable employment of housekeeping; or, at least, to postpone any radical change until a few men have been taught to discriminate between macramé lace and dish-towels.—Farmer's Review.

The Ghost that Jones Saw. "Speaking of ghosts," said Jones in a lead voice, as he and Mrs. Jones were discussing these subjects the other evening, "I could never be afraid of them, because I don't believe in them. So far I haven't seen anything that looked much worse than myself."

It was near morning when Jones was dreaming sweetly of being tossed on the horns of a white cow, when Mrs. Jones laid a cold hand on the back of his neck and whispered in his high ear, "Wake up, Jephtha, some one's stirring!"

A Boy Hero.

Lives in Tompkins county, N. Y., up a well-to-do farmer named Pitkins. With his wife and two daughters. Having no sons, he is dependent on hired help, the supply of which is regulated according to the season, a number of farm hands being necessary during planting and harvesting of crops, while one being usually the only assistant needed in the winter. Realizing the need of a boy on the place to do the chores, for which it did not justify to hire a man, Pitkins talked the matter over with his wife, and they decided to select a waif from the poor-house and raise him up as one of their family, which of course meant food and clothing until he was of age, and three months' schooling in the winter.

His Pa Hires a Goat for a Wet Nurse.

"Well, how is the baby?" asked the nurse of the bad boy, as he came in and sat down on the chair with the back gone, and looked very tired.
