

Bride Winning. The natives of Australia facilitate the ceremonies of wooing in a wonderful way. If a young man fancies a pretty girl, he just kisses her down, slings her over his shoulder and carries her home.

A love-sick Kalmuck gathers his friends together, makes a raid on the house of his inamorata, cudgels his intended father in law and bangs his prospective mother in law, and carries the maiden off in triumph.

An Esquimaux youth must first show his ability to be a householder by slaughtering a bear. If he can do this he is thought fit to grapple with the dangers of matrimony. Having accomplished this feat he casts his eye about for a spouse. He forthwith seizes her. She bites, kicks, scratches and yells, while all the women in the village rush to her rescue. But if the young man can catch her twice more after being rescued, she is his.

In Central Asia the tribes give on a fleet pony and she starts off on the plain with a tribe of youths after her. She generally manages to let some special favorite come up with her first.

In the great Eastern Islands a race-course is staked out, the girl is given a start, and if she can get three times round the stake first she is free, but it is generally noticed that the fleet-footed maidens are often slow on such occasions.

In Singapore they have a canoe race. The girl has a big start, paddles her own canoe, and can generally escape or get caught as she sees fit. In the country of the Khors a man wraps his bride up in a red cloth and carries her home like a sack of meal, all the women pelting him with stones.
