Spontaneous Human Combustion.

Don Gio Maria Bertholi having spent the day in travelling about the country, arrived in the evening at the house of his brother-in-law; he immediately requested to be shown to his destined apartment, where he had a handkerchief placed between his shirt and shoulders, and being left alone betook himself to his devotions. A few minutes had scarcely elapsed when an extraordinary noise was heard from the apartment, and the cries of the unfortunate priest were particularly distinguished—the people of the house hastily entering the room, found him extended on the floor, and surrounded by a light flame which receded, a measure, as they approached, and finally vanished.—On the following morning the patient was examined by Monsieur Battaglia, who found the integuments of the right arm almost entirely detached and pendant from the flesh; from the shoulders to the thighs, the integuments were equally injured; and on the right hand, the part most injured; mortification had already commenced, which, notwithstanding immediate scarification, rapidly extended itself. The patient complained of burning thirst, and was hourly convulsed, he passed by stool putrid and billious matter, and was exhausted by continual vomiting accompanied by fever and delirium. On the fourth day, after two hours comatose insensibility, he expired; during the whole period of this suffering it was impossible to trace any symptomatic affection. A short time previous to his decease, Mr. Battaglia saw with astonishment, that putrifaction had made so much progress that the body already exhaled an insufferable odour, worms crawled from it on the bed, and the nails had become detached from the left hand.

The account given by the unhappy patient was, that he felt a stroke like the blow of a cudgel on the right hand, and at the same time he saw a lambent flame (bluette de feu) attach itself to his shirt, which was immediately reduced to ashes, his wristbands (prignets) at the same time being utterly untouched. The handkerchief which, as before mentioned, was placed between his shoulders and his shirt, was entire and free from any trace of burning; his breeches were equally uninjured; but though not a hair of his head was burnt, his coil (culotte) was totally consumed. On the night of the accident it was calm, the air very pure, no empyranmatic or bituminous odour was perceived in the room, which was also free from smoke; there was no vestige of fire, except that the lamp, which had been full of oil, was found dry, and the wick reduced to cinder.—(Fodere, tom, 8.)

Some Date Trees, planted in New Orleans about 7 years since are this season in blossom. This tree grows slowly, and is said to produce in 12 years from planting, but will live and bear 300 years. Besides the value of its fruits, mats and baskets are made of the leaves, ropes of the fibres, and the trunk is good for building or firewood. Its appearance is beautiful, elevating its trunk 30 or 40 feet without branches—the leaves which spring out at the top form a kind of capital to the pillar.

POSTHUMOUS ROGUERY.—We have lately heard an anecdote of a singular piece of roguery which far surpasses in ingenuity any stroke of knavery of the present prolific day: Some years ago, a city banker died, leaving a will in which he bequeathed very large sums to his relations and friends, twenty thousand pounds to one, ten thousand to another, thirty thousand to a connection; and so forth, the whole legacies amounting to a vast sum, (half a million it is said,) but they were left under this condition, that they were not to be paid to the parties till after a lapse of ten years from the death of the testator, and during this time the money was to remain part of the capital of the firm. This seemed a commercial whim, no more. At the expiration of ten years the legacies were applied for, and it was discovered that not one sixpence of them was forthcoming, or ever had any existence except in the imaginative will of the deceased banker. His sole object was to give credit to the firm, and this he completely accomplished, for every body took it for granted, that the immense property willed away was, during the ten years, making a part of the capital of the firm, and a high idea was formed of the stability of a house so strengthened. The fraud answered completely Considering all the circumstances, this posthumous piece of knavery seems to be unparallelled. Posthumous rogueries for the advantage of children, or near relatives, are not rare; but a posthumous roguery for the benefit of a firm, has an air of disinterested knavery about it. But, however, it is very possible that a trader may take to heart the prosperity of a firm, as much as a father does that of a beloved child.

A marriage notice has been sent to the editor of the Yates Republican, (N. Y.) for publication, having appended to it the following proviso:—'This couple were married on condition that the usual fee be paid the justice within a month, otherwise the contract to be void.'—This reminds us of a patriotic old magistrate of this county, now deceased, whose mind dwelt continually upon the success of the recruiting services during the revolutionary struggle, & who, on being called upon to marry a couple, pronounced them husband and wife for three years, and during the war. But the young votaries of bymen not relishing so short an engagement, were at their own request, tacked together for life.
