FROM THE LONDON CHRONICLE.

Peculiarity of the Cockney Pronunciation.

Sir—Much has been said of late about the 'vast improvements' made, and making and of the 'march of intellect,' which they say is steadily going on.—Amidst all these improvements and marches, I wish to God the people of this metropolis would bestow a little trouble in procuring teachers to instruct them, their wives and children, in the pronunciation of the English language. It is intolerable to hear (go where you will) ouse, orse, ome, im and er, &c instead of house, horse, home, him, and her, &c. and hale, hice, hiron, hair, &c. for ale, ice, iron, air, &c. &c. Surely it is just as easy to sound the H where it ought to be, as where it ought not, and vice versa. In the same way they add the letter R where it should not be, and take it off where it really is, viz—fellow, tallow, idea, law, &c &c. they sound fellor, tallor, hidear, lawr; while father, mother, sister, &c. they pronounce fathee, mothee, sistee, &c. They invariably sound wine, gown, &c. wind gound, &c. As to their v for w and w for v, it is so disgracefully annoying, that one is astonished at their persevering in it; aware, as they must be, that they are laughed at, on this score, by the whole kingdom

"Weal, Vine, and Winegar, Wery good Wictuals, I wow,"

I remember laughing at (when nine years of age) at school. Their anythink and nothink, rale instead of real, are not quite so bad, though in truth bad enough. Road ought not by well educated persons, to be pronounced rowd; or post, wowst; and an Englishman ought to sound the word whig differently from wig. Hardly a man you meet with, can pronounce the word whole; some say wole, others hole, and others again hull (Lord Grenville pronounces it in the latter way). Observe, Mr Editor, I am not alluding to the 'Patois' of watermen, hackney coachmen, or link boys, in these remarks. The abominations I complain of occur in nearly every dining-room & party in the parishes of St. James', St. George's and Mary le bone.

'Oh! reform it altogether.'—Shakespeare.

Your obedient servant,
VIATOR.

Stephen's Bond street, Jan. 28.

The best English I have heard has been spoken by Americans. I acknowledge it with shame. V.

A MEAL IS A MEAL.—A traveller some time ago, stopped at a tavern in Rhode Island at the decline of day, when his appetite began to be rather clamorous, asked for a cold cut, at the same time prudently enquiring the price. 'Twenty five cents' replied mine host. 'That's rather high,' returned the other, 'as I merely want a cold bite. 'No matter for that,' replied mine host, 'A MEAL IS A MEAL, and I never charge less than twenty five cents.' 'Well, if that be the case,' replied the traveller, I may as well have a meal cooked.' Accordingly the gridiron was placed over the coals, and a steak of respectable dimensions was soon broiled and placed on the table. The stranger sat down, and like a man that works by the job, soon despatched the beef steak, together with its accompaniments, and called for more, observing at the same time "A MEAL IS A MEAL you know.' Another steak of goodly size was forthwith cooked and placed before him.—This also disappeared in a very short time, and yet unsatisfied, the traveller bawled for more, still repeating, 'A MEAL IS A MEAL Sir.' A steak larger than either of the former was now cooked, and without the least appearance of satiety in the eater, sent to join the rest; and the demand was reiterated for more, accompanied as usual with the unlucky phrase of mine host, A 'MEAL IS A MEAL.' Thus mine hostess was kept cooking for two full hours, and steak after steak disappeared with the most appalling despatch, each time accompanied with the ill-omened sentence, 'A MEAL IS A MEAL you know;' until at last the innkeeper, hopeless of satisfying his guest, and heartily sick of the operation of his own rule, told the traveller if he would quit him then, he would charge him nothing for what he had eaten;—to which the other, finding he could not hold out much longer, consented, without much show of reluctance, & merely added, as he was washing down the last morsel with a mug of cider "A MEAL IS A MEAL, you will recollect."

Berkshire American.

An Irish paper gives the following anecdote of the simplicity of a raw Pat, who had just been transplanted from the interior to Dublin. Pat had been sent by his master to purchase half a bushel of oysters, to the quay, but was absent so long, that apprehensions were entertained for his safety. He returned at last, however, puffing under his load in the most musical style. 'Where the devil have you been?' exclaimed his master. 'Where have I been? why where would I be but to fetch the oysters!' 'And what in the name of St. Patrick kept you so long?' 'Long! by my sowl I think I've been pretty quick considering all things.' 'Considering what things.' 'Considering what things? why, considering the gutting the fish to be sure!' 'Gutting what fish?' 'What fish? why, blurnowns, the oysters to be sure!' 'What do you mean!' 'What do I mane? why, I mane, that as I was a resting myself down forenent the Pickled Herring, and having a drop to comfort me, a jontleman axed me what I'd got in the sack! 'Oysters,' says I. Let's look at them, says he, and he opens the bag. 'Och! thunder and pratees,' says he, 'who sowld you these?' 'It was Mich Carney,' says I, 'aboard the Pawl Doodie smack?' 'Mick Carney the thief o' the world!' says he; 'what a blackguard he must be to give them to you without gutting,' 'And ar'nt they gutted?' says I—'Devil o, one o' them,' says he. 'Musha, then,' says I, 'what will I do!' 'Do,' says he, 'I'd sooner do it for you myself than have you abused.' And so he takes 'em in doors, and guts 'em nate and clane, as you'll see;' opening, at the same time, his bag of oyster shells, which were as empty as the head that bore them to the house. If we had not this from an Irish paper, we should venture to doubt its authenticity.

[London paper.

Original Anecdote——Not long since a son of Erin riding in the stage, with some cheerful companions, maintained the discourse until a sudden huskiness in his throat much oppressed him; at length however, an inn-post hove in view, and Pat's visage brightened. A stop was effected—the passengers all got out, and were seated in the room. "A bottle of brandy," cried Pat, with distressed countenance; no answer was returned, but a huge placard was placed before his wonder-opened eyes, on which was painted the arms of the state, and the following words to wit:

"Know ardent sperit sold,
good lickker for medasin."

The barwoman was dumpling-built, a little above forty, and on beholding the phiz of the Irishman she declared she had 'kaupby for tree pence a cup.' Pat whispered a fellow passenger, 'By the shiners of Cork, but I'll gist bother the spalpeen; so suiting the action to the word, 'Hallo!' says he, 'I m in a fit, and popt on the floor—The company gathered about Pat, with lines of consternation marking each countenance. The humanity of the bar lady was proverbial—she screamed, and bursting into the ring, 'law me,' says she, 'why he's got the apple pleary; lickker will help 'im, I'll be bound; it always does it for sterrickay folks'—and soon she paraded brandy for cholic, whiskey for physic, gin for spleen, rum for ague, and cold water to dash in Pat's face, when she rinsed half a tumbler of it on Pat. 'Lightning shine on your cap, honey, but you'll give me no more o'that! but if ye possess a dist o'th' love of charity in your composition, bring me a drap of catnip tea, or I'm kilt.' And while the honest landlady was busy in concocting Pat's tea, he jumped up and all regaling and refreshing themselves, departed.—The landlady came in with the smoking nero drink; but the scene before her deprived her tongue of the power of articulation: sundry of her 'lickkers' vanished with her guests; but there was a luminous side to the picture—'tis most true,' (alas!) 'the lickker is gone, but (casting an eye upon the table) they've left me a silver dollar,' quoth she—She destroyed her placard, and now sells good liquor to all who pay her in hand.

Curious Manuscript.—A Philadelphia paper makes mention of a very curious piece of penmanship, which is at present exhibited at the room of the Athenæum of that city. It is a sheet of vellum a yard square, containing the books of Ruth, Esther, Job, the Song of Solomon, Lamentations, and Psalms, written in the Hebrew character, and so disposed as to form a series of beautiful figures, representing all the sacred instruments and furniture of the Temple of Jerusalem—the altar the mercy seat, the cherubim, the candlestick, the tables of the law, the columns and flowers upon their capitols, &c. The work is beautifully written and drawn, and was the exclusive labor of three full years. Although the patience, ingenuity and industry, necessary to the performance of such a work would, properly exerted, entitle the possessor to much commendation, yet we cannot but think that, in the present instance, they have been unworthily bestowed, and that the end is in no wise proportioned to the means. The misapplication of so much time as a performance of this kind consumes—three full years it is stated that it occupied—is of itself deserving to be censured; but in addition to this we will venture to say, that the young lady alluded to, in her sedulous attention to a work, which, now that it is consumated, is of no real, intrinsic value, has injured her health, and very probably destroyed her sight. Such at all events we know to have been the case with an interesting female in this city, who indiscreetly undertook to copy the whole of Young's Night Thoughts, in imitation of print, which she finally accomplished in a style of great beauty and neatness, but at the expense of her sight, which she soon after totally lost.
