POETRY.

[From the New York Evening Post.]

"The memory of the Templars is embalmed, for the last struggle for the holy land was made by the Red Cross Knights."—CRUSADES.

Knights, to the conflict on!
No laurel'd host 'tis ours to lead,
No trophied victory our meed,
No pledge of battle won,
But banner rent, and broken cross—
Our life-blood on the withered moss,
Shows where our steps have gone.

Well was the holy sign
Blood-red upon our banners dyed;
For blood has been the gushing tide
Upon the ruin'd shrine.
We strove with fearless hearts to screen,
While woe and anguish came between
Us and our native vine.

Come forth to die alone!
Be this the bliss of memory,
This the proud meed of valiancy,
For what our swords have down.
We sully not our warrior name,
We've done what virtue, valor claim—
Knights, to the conflict on!

Uprear the cross on high!
Its last brave champions we stand,
The remnant of a warrior band,
On the red earth to lie:
The closing sacrifice invites—
Come, gather, to its bloody rites—
Come to the trench to die!

A Greek Boat-builder.—Whatever illustrate the habits and character of the Greeks is peculiarly interesting at this time, and a single example often conveys more information on this subject than a volume of general descriptions and remarks. Dr. Howe gives the following account of a Greek boat builder of the island of Scopelus, on the eastern coast of Thessaly, about 70 or 80 miles north from Athens.

Almost every Greek sailor is capable of being a ship builder, and it is surprising to see the skill and ingenuity which they exhibit. I have been assured that some of their most beautiful vessels, that are known to all mariners as the finest specimens of graceful modelling and symmetrical construction, were built by men calling themselves master workmen, but who did not know the common principles of Mathematics. I was once going along the beach in the little retired island of Scopelus, and my attention was attracted to a long and beautifully shaped boat, nearly finished. I approached and found only one man, squatting beside her on his heels, eating biscuit and olives. I asked him where the builders were? "Ego emai," replied he; he was building her alone. I looked round for his tools, but not seeing them, asked him where his scale and compasses were. The man stared; I found he did not know Gunter's scale, from a gridiron, and resolved to wait and see him resume his work. After he had finished his olives, wiped his mustachios and crossed himself three times; he got up, examined his little red cross, and piece of garlic, which he had nailed on the bow of his boat, to keep off the devil, and all other evil spirits, and finding all well, he resumed his tools. He had a rude axe; a block of wood with a handle drove into it, for a mallet; another instrument which he called a saw, but which to me seemed wondrously like a notched iron hoop; and his dividers were formed by a piece of oak wood, split half way up, with a wedge to push up and down, to open or shut the arms; one of the split ends he would dip into a composition of brick dust and spittle to shew me how well it would describe a circle; but his principal instrument, and with which he could cut, plane, and mortise, and which he wore in his girdle, was a long, well tempered knife, I went off, thinking about Dædalus and Arahimedes; and as I turned round to look again at the gracefully modelled boat, which the old man had shaped out, I wondered where he got his ideas of beauty and proportion, or if he had ever heard of Phidias or Praxiteles.

ALARMING DISTRESS!—It appears, by an Alabama paper, that, in that State, there is a most deplorable scarcity of young ladies. It is stated, that every respectable female, whether native or stranger, is, as soon as possible, summoned at the Court of Hymen. To each young lady there are one hundred young gentlemen! Here, then, is an efficient demand for the article of young women in Alabama; and, notwithstanding the immense competition, protection is required for the damsels. This is a singular state of things, which must be put to rights by the operation of the American System.
