POETRY.

'Tis Home where e'er the Heart is.

[From the Winter's Wreath.]

'Tis Home where e'er the heart is!
Where e'er its loved ones dwell,
In cities or in cottages,
Thronged haunts or mossy dell;
The heart's a rover ever,
And thus on wave and wild,
The maiden with her lover walks,
The mother with her child.

'Tis bright where e'er the heart is;
Its fairy spells can bring
Fresh fountains to the wilderness,
And to the desert—spring.
There are green isles in each ocean,
O'er which affection glides;
And a haven on each shore,
When Love's the star that guides.

'Tis free where e'er the heart is;
Not chains, nor dungeon dim,
May check the mind's aspirings,
The spirit's pealing hymn!
The heart gives life its beauty,
Its glory and its power,—
'Tis sunlight to its rippling stream,
And soft dew to its flower.

THE HAUNTED HOUSE.

The following true story says a correspondent was related to me by a gentleman who heard it from one of the officers in the army where it happened:—

"At the time the French were crossing the Alps there were two young men in the army who had been educated together and remarkable for their attachment to each other. The sun was just sinking behind the horizon, when we arrived at the Inn, the landlord, after apologizing for not being able to accommodate them, communicated the disagreeable intelligence that all the beds were engaged.

"Oh never mind" said one of the officers, 'we can sit up all night, only give us plenty of wine.'

'Gentlemen,' replied the host, 'I have a house about a mile or two distant, which is uninhabited, in which I can accommodate you; but to tell you the truth, it has the reputation of being haunted.'

"The officers said they should prefer sitting up all night, to sleeping in a house with such a disagreeable recommendation. The two young friends, however, agreed to accompany the landlord. After walking about a mile, they came to a large house before which there was a long avenue of lofty trees. 'This, said the landlord 'is the place where you are to spend the night.'

"After having made a fire and prepared supper, he begged them to go back with him as far as the avenue as he was afraid to return by himself. They laughed at his foolish fears but went with him. They then returned to the mansion and partook of the repast which had been prepared for them. However, as it began to grow dark they were a little afraid Their fears increased with the gloom of the evening."

"What shall we do? said the one to the other. They agreed that the one should watch while the other slept; and to make it easier he should sit up in bed—which he did with a dagger in his hand."

"In this way one of them watched until 12 o'clock. He then awoke his companion saying it was now his turn—and laid down to sleep.—In a short time the door slowly opened and an old man of a most gigantic stature entered the room. He beckoned to the officer, and said follow me!

"He arose and followed the man down several flights of steps, till they came to a large room dimly lighted by a lamp which hung in the centre. Round a stone table were seated eleven other men of the same gigantic stature as the first. The old men then went out leaving him standing in the middle of the room.—He could not conjecture what they were doing as they never opened their lips. The old man presently returned carrying a beautiful young female. He laid her down on the table and uttering a savage yell plunged a knife into her heart. The officer was so exasperated that he drew his dagger and stabbed him to the heart; but what was his horror upon waking—for it was a dream—to find he had murdered his friend! He had only time to say, "You have killed me—I forgive you," before he expired.

"The young man retired to tell his companions the sad catastrophe, but his heart was broken: he wandered about the mountains in a state of distraction for four months, and at last shot himself."—[Lexington Examiner.

The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe.

"Times have changed," and we consider it as a good proof of the assertion, that Robinson Crusoe has gone out of fashion. We look among the list of "Christmas presents," and into the juvenile Libraries, in vain, for that marvellously attractive book. Alas! as the hermit's parrot was wont to say, "poor Robinson!" Whole fonts of type have been worn out in its composition, and Presses have been established to give new editions birth. It has been read in the nasal twang of the French—the guttural of the German; in Low Dutch, Spanish Portuguese, Italian, Latin and Greek;—but its day has certainly passed; and De Foe's best work may now go to sleep with his "Jura Divina;" unless some of those whose youth found delight in its pages, should, from mere gratitude, "teach their sons to love it too."

We had a small anecdote to tell of the adventures of Robinson Crusoe, but could not persuade ourselves to enter directly upon it, without a prefatory commendation of the "friend of youth," and an appendant groan upon the comparative neglect into which he has fallen.

We like new books; but touching "Robinson Crusoe," we say, with the song—

"Should auld acquaintance be forgot?"

A short time since, a respectable bookseller of this city, purchased, at a trade sale in New York, a quantity of "Robinson Crusoes," which, having paid for, he ordered to be packed up in a box, and sent by sloop to this city, marked J. C. his initials.

Another gentleman of this city, whose attendance in New York was of a less business-like turn, made a purchase of some excellent Champaign, real, J. C. pink sparkling—and as it happened, the wine merchant caused it to be shipped by the same packet that brought the booksellers purchase. "They arrived safe;" and the purchaser of the wine caused immediate enquiry to be made for his box; the shipper's receipt therefor, marked J. C. was presented, and a box delivered to the servant, who carefully deposited it, with its contents, in his master's wine cellar.

The bookseller looked in vain for his "Adventures of Robinson Crusoe." He advertised them as lost; but no "mention of them was heard;" and the concern was given up as one of the evils of trade.

Some two or three months afterwards, the purchaser of the wine was determined to try its quality, and by a full jury, at a dinner party.—The box was therefore placed at hand; and when eating was disposed of, and the proper attention paid to the Madeira, the servant was or-

One Hundred Dollars Reward.

RANAWAY on Saturday night last, a negro man called DANIEL, who is about 32 years of age, five feet 8 or 9 inches high, of a dark mulatto colour, has broad shoulders and broad face, is rather lusty and well made, has large white teeth, his eyes are of a reddish colour, and when he is spoken to he has a smile on his countenance. Daniel was hired out in Easton, and went off under pretence of going to Camp Meeting, and there is reason to believe that he was accompanied by a negro man, the property of Mrs. Smyth, who was also hired out in Easton, and is of a chesnut colour and rather tall. I have no knowledge of what clothes Daniel took with him, other than a blue jacket and fur hat nearly new It is more than probable that these negroes will make their way either to Delaware or New Jersey. The above reward will be paid for apprehending Daniel if taken out of the State, and Fifty Dollars if taken in the State and lodged in Jail so that I get him and all reasonable expenses paid if brought to Easton and lodged in Jail.
