ABERNETHY.—The interest created by the whimsicalities, talents, and peculiar medical notions of Mr Abernethy, is little less on our side of the Atlantic than his own. Every one who has the misfortune to possess an inveterately deranged stomach for months or years, and felt the maladies which flow from it will at once accord in the truth so often inculcated by this extraordinary man; namely, 'that to put improper food into a weak stomach, plays the very d—l with it. Vegetable matter ferments and becomes gaseous; while animal substances are changed into a putrid, abominable, and acrid stimulus.' But while this is known it would be clever enough to know also what a man shall eat, and where withal he shall sustain himself. Moreover Doctors would do a world of service if they could tell one thus afflicted how to restrain himself at the right point, how he shall get over the smell of a beef steak, how to reject a tempting peach or a blushing strawberry, and how slay and keep down that monster, appetite, within him, which, like the Paddy's convict is ever 'speachless,' crying water, water.' The everlasting call is for food, food, and to resist it requires more energy than feeble man can summon before dinner. Doubtless he must die for it, but that is a contingency which does not always stare him in the face to aid him in his abstinence.

[Extract from Profession Sketches.-new Monthly Magazine.]

We have said, that Mr. Abernethy is only occasionally restive, and we speak from the conviction of our own experience. We hesitate not to declare that, to us, Mr. Abernethy has always appeared full of whim and drollery, replete with agreeable information, willing to lend an attractive ear to necessary questions, & to impart that professional knowledge of which he possesses such an extensive store. But one thing he cannot abide, that is any interruption to his discourse. This it is, in fact, which so often irritates him, so often causes him to snarl. 'People come here,' he has often said to us, 'to consult me, and they will torture me with their long and foolish fiddle-de-dee stories; so we quarrel, and then they blackguard me all about this large town; but I can't help that.' Let those who wish for Abernethy's advice, and it is well worth having, observe this rule, and they and he will part excellent friends. Let them tell their case in as plain and as few words as possible, and then listen to their adviser's remarks without interruption; this is the only secret of managing this professional bugbear, and it is a secret worth knowing.

That Abernethy is odd, all the world knows; but his oddity is far more amusing than repulsive, far more playful than bearish. Yates's picture of him last year was not bad; neither was it good—it wanted the raciness of the original. Let the reader imagine a snug, elderly, sleek, and venerable looking man, approaching seventy years of age, rather (as novel writers say,) below than above the middle height, somewhat inclined to corpulency, and upright in his carriage withal; with his hair most primly powdered, and nicely curled round his brow and temples; let them imagine such a person habited in sober black, with his feet thurst carelessly into a pair of unlaced half boots, and his hands into the pockets of his "peculiars;" and they have the "glorious John" of the profession before their eyes. The following colloquy, which occurred not many days since, between him and a friend of ours, is so characteristic of the professor, that we cannot resist its insertion.

Having entered the room, our friend 'opened the proceeding.' 'I wish you to acertain what is the matter with my eye, Sir. It is very painful, and I am afraid there is some great mischief going on.' 'Which I can't see;' said Abernethy, placing the patient before the window, and looking closely at the eye. 'But' —interposed our friend. 'Which I can't see' again said, or rather sung, the professor.—'Perhaps not Sir, but—, 'Now don't bother!; ejaculated the other; 'but sit down, and I'll tell you all about it.' Our friend sat down accordingly, while Abernethy, standing with his back against the table, thus began: "I take it for granted that, in consulting me, you wish to know what I should do for myself, were I in a predicament similar to yourself. Now, I have no reason to suppose that you are in any particular predicament; and the terrible mischief which you apprehend, depends, I take it altogether upon the stomach. Mind—at present I have no reason to believe that there is any thing else the matter with you.' (Here my friend was about to disclose sundry dreadful maladies with which he believed himself afflicted, but he was interrupted with 'Diddle-dum, diddle-dum, diddle-dum, dee!' uttered in the same smooth tone as the previous part of the address—and he was silent) 'Now, your stomach being out of order, it is my duty to explain to you how to put it to rights again; and in my whimsical way, I shall give an illustration of my position; for I like to tell people something that they will remember.

The Kitchen, that is, your stomach, being out of order, the garret (pointing to the head) cannot be right and egad? every room in the house becomes affected. Repair the injury in the kitchen, remedy the evil there—(now don't bother) and all will be right. This you must do by diet. If you put improper food into your stomach, by Gad you play the very devil with it, and with the other machine besides. Vegetable matter ferments, and becomes gaseous; while animal substances are changed into a putrid, abominable, and acrid stimulous.—(Don't bother again!) You are going to ask 'What has all this to do with my eye, I will tell you. Anatomy teaches us, that the skin is a continuation of the membrane which lines the stomach; and your own observation will inform you that the delicate lining of the mouth throat, nose, and eyes are nothing more. Now some people acquire preposterous noses, others blotches on the face and different parts of the body, others inflammation of the eyes—all arising from irritation of the stomach. People laugh at me for talking so much about the stomach. I sometimes tell this story to forty different people of a morning, and some won't listen to me, so we quarrel, and they go and abuse me all over the town. I can't help it—they came to me for my advise, and I give it them, if they will take it.—I can't do any more Well, Sir, as to the question of diet. I must refer to my book (here the professor smiled, and continued smiling as he proceeded.)—There are only about a dozen pages—and you will find beginning at page 73, all that is necessary for you to know. I am christened Doctor My-Book, and satirized under that title all over England; but who would sit and listen to a long lecture of twelve pages, or remember one half of it when it is done? So I have reduced my directions into writing, and they are for any body to follow, if they please.

Use of Liquors in the Army.—The Secretary of War, in reply to an inquiry made of him by the H. of Representatives, whether the use of ardent spirits can be dispensed with in the army of the United States, has made a report. He gives it as his opinion that the habitual use of ardent spirits, or even in moderate quantities, is unfavourable to health, and that the chances for vigor, health and long life, are in favour of him who abstains from it altogether. He, however, thinks that so small a quantity as a gill a day, taken at different times, is not calculated to impair the health of persons engaged in active employments, and that the sudden abandonment of it by persons who have been in the habit of using it, might prove injurious to their health.
