POETRY.

THE BROKEN HEART.

I knew the story of a broken heart;—
A sad tale 'twas, and such an one as some
Of austere brow and cold mysterious eye
Might scarcely deign to hear, or hearing it,
Would gravely smile and then, with solemn air
Shaking the doubtful head turned back to dust:
But haply some may learn from it that sadness
By which the heart grows better, for the tear
That falls for woe doth ever purify
The soul that sent it, and returns again
A flood of peace sweet as a seraph's prayer.

They loved—or thought they loved, for cunningly
Doth the arch god rivet an iron chain
Around one neck, nor lets the sufferer see
How light he wreathes the silken thread that joins
His mated slave to that eternal yoke.
She was a blessed creature;—one may live
From blushing boyhood down to hoary age,
And only once in that long waste of years
Could such a vision come, but never more
To be forgotten:—not the wanton flowers
Laugh'd to the sunbeam half so gay as she;
The sweet south-west on wings of fragrant gladness
Linger'd and sigh'd at her sweet rivalry:
She was the very dream to light the life
Of a boy-poet in his passionate hour:
There never came a thought, when she was by
That time would ever ask her to give up
One single sparkle of her glorious eye;
That there was such a thing as time, or death,
Or that one little silken tress of her's
Would ever droop down in the cold, cold dust.

And could she love that strange and moody man
Who walk'd among his kind companionless,
A dreamy wayward man?—Her lightest word
Could win him back from musing melancholy;
And when at times a saddening power pass'd
Along his pale broad brow, and quench'd awhile
His eagle-spirit, she would wreathe again
Her fairy-fingers in his raven locks
And he would kiss her cheek, and smile on her:
She was his hope,—his own,—his all,—and without her
Himself had been as nothing. Hand in hand
Up the broad hills together had they climb'd
And seen the sun, the glorious summer sun
Unfold the violet's petals; they had stood
Upon the moonlight lea, and day by day,
As that mysterious sadness which partakes
Of such deep joy as nature's communings
Alone can give stole o'er them, they had wept
The tears that sanctify and bless; together
Had bow'd their spirits, and with their pure pray'rs
Ador'd high Heaven. What lack they more?—They lov'd:
O, may not love like this forever mock
At Time and Change and Fate?

Solemn and sad
The cold east wind sweeps by the russet oaks,
And the green liveried forests have put on
Their bridal hues, purple and verdant gold;—
Their bridal to decay: solemn and sad
The cold east wind hath swept o'er her; she too
Makes ready her bridal vesture,—is she ready
To marry with the grave? O, who that saw
So very fair and beautiful a thing
Ling'ring thus frail upon the verge of life,
Would marvel if her low gentle prayer
Should waft her up to paradise? Yet all,
Even to the last, had hope, but still wept on
They scarce knew why: but when the trembling leaves
Dropt from the parent boughs,—and a faint shudder
And a tremulous flush, and in her eye
A most unearthly brightness came and pass'd,
And she lay there, voiceless and soulless now,
Lovelier than thought, with her bright golden hair
Glitt'ring amid the violet veins that rose
Upon her holy brow—you would suppose
They had not deem'd of this, so utter was
Their tearless agony.

Far far away,
Over the wide blue waters long and lone
Roam'd that heart-stricken man, nor found he rest,
Nor peace, nor hope and now he came to die
In his own land. The white sails fill'd,—away;
The good ship cleaves the crested billows free.
Yet his heart felt no bounding spring of joy
From morn to night his idle eye was fix'd
Upon the idle wave, save when at times
The westward heav'n grew gladden'd with the joy
Of the perpetual sun, and then with arms
Outspread, and eyes agaze would he long
And wistfully towards that far distant land.
But when the moaning billows rous'd themselves
And the pale sickly sun adown the west
Glar'd white upon the ghastly sea and 'mid
Shrill flying ropes the piping sea-winds shrieked
Till grey-beard sailors shook their hoary heads;
Then he would smile, not proudly nor in scorn
But as if he had hop'd.—had pray'd for Death,
And now would hail him a Deliverer. On
The fast ship bends her course, and now he stood
On his native shore, nor waited he
For welcome or for greeting, till he lay
Along her grave who died among bright flowers,
Ripe honey suckle and sweet fairy cup;
And all night long did the cold faithless moon
Show'r dews on him,—and laughing morn rose up
As fresh and fair as at young Nature's birth—
But it was not for him.

To Literary Gentlemen.

The Editor of the ARIEL respectfully solicits the attention of the gentlemen to whom this is sent, to the following brief proposals.

The number of the ARIEL, which is now sent to you* is the last that has issued from the press, and is accompanied by two splendid copperplate engravings, illustrative, the one, of an interesting scene in Cooper's celebrated novel of the Pioneers—the other, of an equally remarkable incident in Scott's novel of Guy Mannering. All the embellishments to the ARIEL are of the same costly & beautiful description, got up at great expense, and surpassed by those of no other literary periodical in the Union. Every third number contains an engraving.

The subscription-price to the ARIEL is fixed at the very small sum of $1 50 per year—for which two hundred and eight pages of matter are furnished, together with eight copperplate engravings, equal in every respect to those which accompany this number. An immense patronage in every quarter of the United States has been bestowed upon the work, sufficiently attesting that the public considers it worth the small sum which is asked for it.

A few copies of the present volume, complete from No. 9, can yet be furnished: that is from August 22d. 1829, to May 1, 1830—at which time a new volume commences. For this period of eight months, there will occur six of these beautiful illustrations, which of themselves are worth three fourths of the price demanded for the whole eight months. The price for the above-named term, including the six engravings, will be $1:

If any gentleman, postmaster, or other, will exhibit this number to his friends, & interest himself to procure but five subscribers, at $1 each and remit the amount to the Editor, a sixth copy shall be regularly sent him for his kindness every other Saturday, with the papers for other subscribers.

The number of spare copies on hand is small. It is, therefore, desired that those who may order five copies, should advise the Editor by the earliest mail. The papers from August 22d will be sent on immediately, carefully secured in strong wrappers, and the succeeding numbers as they are published.
