From the Ladies' Magazine. TIME'S FESTIVAL.

Old Time once held a festival To bless the opening year, The feast he spread was free to all;

From lowly hut, from lordly hall, He bade his guests appear; But for useful thrift he has long been famed-So lest his revel might be blamed

For luxury and art, The only requisite he named Was to come with a happy heart.

Who gathered to that scene of mirth With joy's benignant brow? Time looked for none of the mighty of earth-The potentates of lofty birth,

Before whom nations bow-He knew that crowns had thorns of care--But the smiling courtier-came he there? Or fashions brilliant throng? The proud, the brave, the rich, the fair? The lords of wit and song?

When Time had scanned the number o'er That came to share his feast, 'Tis said, he declared that never more Would he hold his court on the old world's shore,

Or bid a titled guest--So we opine they would not join, Where the happy ones were sure to shine! And then his brightest days, Full on Freedom's mighty shrine Time turned their glorious rays.

And thus Columbia was ordained The home of the happy hearted; Not here the soul in seeming chained--Not here the smile by flattery feigned--Not here is true-love marted--But life's bright path is free to all, Yet should Time hold a festival

To bless the coming year, And only bid the happy call--Who, think you, would appear?
