POETRY.

For the Easton Gazette.

MR. GRARAM:

The following verses were sent from this place to a friend of mine in Baltimore, who enclosed them to me with a request that you would publish them.

THE FAIR.

Dear Tom, 'tis really a pity That you did not come to the Fair, Easton look'd a miniature of your city When Mons. Lafayette was there.

However I've fulfill'd tho' late, My promise to tell what has pass'd, But the crowd in the room was so great I saw very little at last.

Save Dunstable Hats and black eyes And one or two angels from Kent, Who left for a time Paradise To visit a bachelor's tent!

There were ladies here too from your way, And beauty from Queen Anns in oceans "La belle" shortly since cross'd the bay To put in our heads silly notions.

She overcomes all with her smiles Not a beau that she happens to meet, But the witchery feels of her smiles,

And tells that the' common they 're sweet! Of beaus such a concourse good lack! Of gallants and dandies and flirts, Some had not a shirt to their back, And others no backs to their shirts.

On Tuesday I thought the folks mad, Such rushing in crowds thro' the town-The "Old Bank"-I really felt bad, For fear the whole floor would fall down!

But at night Tom be sure 'twas a squeeze My sides with elbowing were sore, I could walk on their heads with great ease And never once fall to the floor.

Of the articles offered for sale, (I speak of those made by the ladies,) You might surely have bought by the bale Of aprens and work'd clothes for babies.

And there too was a handsome display Of pincushion-hearts and pincases, All sold in a very fair way, By very fair hands and fair faces.

But mid all the noise and confusion, The refreshments look'd really quite nice, Of cake there was such a profusion, And lemonade cooler than ice.

There were raisins and oranges sweet, And ice creams too if you felt warm, And only to finish the treat Was wanted a "punch" or "Hail Storm."

But 'tis over and still and so lone Seems every part of the place. It appears like a dream to have flown With many a beautiful face.

'Tis pass'd my dear Tom -and what recks it-The strangers have all gone away And I will again make my exit From the world of the frolic and gay.

Not a squeak was heard, nor a farewell kick, As the cabinet rats were departing; Not a soul in the household suspected the trick, | $20, making 75 shares of 20 each. Or bade them adieu at starting.

They all cleared out in the dead of the night, Their claws in a terrible scratching: For sudden and short were they put to flight, Ere they smelt the plot which was batching

And skulking in holes to-morrow.

Not half their nibbling task was done, Not a soul had thought of retiring, When they heard a cry distant of "Run! rogues run."

And scamper'd without inquiring.

No useless compliments smother'd their disgrace,

But all cried-'a vengeance confound them; And they scrambled like donkeys, all running a race,

With a mighty dust around them.

And we had a sad thought of the hero, that he Should the billows of trouble be tost on, While we, naughty rogues, in such jovial glee Were chuckling o'er it in Boston.
