PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

What a change is produced by eliciting a few matters of fact? A short time since the Whigs were almost universally depressed in spirit, under the apprehension that Van Buren must of necessity be elected President. The organized tone of all the affiliated presses of the party, were so consistent with each other, so loud and incessant in their declarations, so unmeasured in their assertion of the certainty of success, that the great body of the people were actually deceived and began to settle down in the dogged gloom of despondency. The attempts to rally them by showing that Van Buren, so far from being the choice of the people of the Union, had actually no strength whatever of his own—no confidence of any party or of any section in himself—no personal attachments and no established public virtues or public services to repose on for a single vote—all was fortuitous manifestly that could be said for him or in his behalf. To all this the reply was, he is the nominee of Andrew Jackson & the office holders; he has the countenance of all the 'spoils' party, & is left in command of the millions of surplus money in the treasury, at least until the first of January next The people will be corrupted by their own money—we fear,—such was the expression—we fear there is no hope of a wholesome reform.

What was to awaken the people from this deadly delirum? Why, the ascertainment of a few matters of fact which are now proved by the preliminary elections that have taken place. The intelligence from one State after another as the elections take place, seem as it were actually to electrify both parties. The great body of those who remain always undecided until they can see which is the strong side, and who had been induced by the confident tone of the Vanites, to think his success almost certain, and of course to lean over on that side—all the half way hobblers and fence men, awaken at once to the wrong position in which they find themselves, and are taking new attitudes in such numbers as startle and cover the leaders of the 'spoils party' with consternation and confusion. The Whigs waken up on every hand with renewed hopes and renewed ardour in the cause of their country and its constitution. Day begins to dawn—a cheering and enlivening light breaks upon from the distant horizon, and promisses another glorious era for the Republic.

What is this we hear from Louisiana, where we were told all was lost, and he fact seemed so probable, judging by their late choice of a United States Senator! Louisiana is erect once more.—Two out of the three Congressmen they elect are decidedly anti-Van Buren, and a majority of four Whigs on joint ballot are returned to the Legislature. All hopes of Van Buren's success in that State is overwhelmed at once.

What reaches us next? North Carolina, the great old Democrat State, where Jacksonism was pronounced so triumphant that the very idea of the Whigs maintaining another contest was laughed at, and scouted as ridiculous, comes up to the polls; the body of the people are in the movement—the lofty pretences of the Vanites are tumbled into the dust—the descendants of Marion and the associates of Macon have pronounced, and North Carolina stands erect, regenerated and disenthralled.

The next intelligence is from Kentucky, even Kentucky was set down and counted up for Van Buren. The people of Kentucky by a vote of nearly two to one, pronounce in all her departments, she will have no fellowship with men of the principles or the practices of Martin Van Buren or Richard M. Johnson.

Indianna next records her vote—there is no mistaking the result there—pleading that the Presidential question was not allowed to operate in her State election, and that the result in November may be different, is a sorry expedient for the Vanites to resort to.

Missouri—even Benton's own State—could not the Achilles of the party keep even Missouri? Ashley is running as they themselves allow 'beyond conception'—and a majority of "Bank men" are admitted to be elected to the legislature. Alas! poor Benton! Is this the balm for they sore disappointments in Congress? Oh for power to 'Expunge' the awful record written upon the wall—'Mene, mene, tekel upharsin,' 'Thou art weighed in the balance, and found wanting.'

One single low murmur from the West—one only solitary sound discordant to the rest that teaches us from thence is from Illinois. That State remains as yet under the cloud, & serves as a cordial to revive the drooping spirits of the poor chop fallen Vanites. Yet we despair not even of Illinois; much may be effected even there—and no where more likely than there, by the proof which is now produced on every hand, of the falling off from what was supposed to be the prominent candidate. Show that Van Buren can be beaten, and he will be beaten out of the world, and double distanced.

Alabama next cheers us with decisive
