too much the politician of a party, and had too little respect for the good of the community in making his selections. I do not complain of the removals that were made, or doubt at all the propriety of the exercise of such power, but I do complain, that unworthy and incompetent persons, but too largely swell the list.—Indeed the want of common honesty is entirely absent from some of the individuals, and this too, acknowledged by the very men who were instrumental in elevating, and installing them into office—Just look at the list of the Justices of the peace, and you will, and all unprejudiced men will readily concur with me in the sentiment expressed. That a majority of them are very good men I do not deny, but I do very much question the propriety of paying a general compliment to the published list. Now I contend that every man, who is operated upon, and plenteously endued with a spirit of patriotism will in his selection of officers of trust have an especial eye, singular to the public good, and advancement of public moral. It appears not how low, or inconsiderable an office under government may be, it still has its proportionable influence in depressing, or elevating the standard of public virtue.

How much to be regretted it is, that the wholesome advice given by a once high functionary of this county to another of equal merit, has not been followed & carried out literally. I solemnly believe that Mobocracy (as it is termed) Lynch-law, and every foul occupant of Pandora's box have been nurtured, and scattered in broad cast over our happy land by the demons of party, under the imposing, but deceptious garb of patriotism. And sir, unless this corrupt system of appointing corrupt officers under state, as well as federal government be not speedily checked, I fear the splendid fabric of our ancestors will soon totter and crumble to the dust.

RANDOM SHOT, No. 4.

Under a specious misnomer, how easily we become familiar with the perpetration of sin and folly.—STAGE-COACH.

'Give the dog a bad name, and hang him,' is a proverb, with which every one acquainted with our language, has grown familiar. The poor animal may be very innocent of any offence, that deserves the halter; yet he has the reputation of a culprit, which deprives him of the sympathies of the neighborhood; and his neck must pay the forfeit. To be called vicious is equivalent, for any purposes of injury which society may inflict upon an obnoxious person, with being vicious in reality. There are a thousand ways, too, besides suffering loss of estate, or violence in person, in which an angry community deals out its chastisement upon the victim of its indignation. Indeed, to a virtuous & sensitive mind nothing gives so painful an apprehension, as the probability of losing the good opinion of mankind Hence, it becomes a matter of great effort, with most, of desire, with all, to retain the favorable estimation of their fellows.

The really virtuous who may have fallen under the odium of an offence which they are conscious of never having committed, either calmly bid defiance to the calumny, or sturdily deny its applicability to themselves. Actual offenders, when sheltered behind the plausible covert of testimony insufficient to convict them, simulate, according to their strength of intellect, and progress in depravity, the practice of those who are wrongfully accused. A bad reputation is quite as offensive to them. as if they had never deserved it. Nor do those whose crimes are palpable and notorious abandon their regard for the esteem of society. They are fully sensible of having done wrong. They are alike sensible of the futility of attempting to conceal from the public eye, the facts of which there is abundant evidence. The only resort for palliation is the substitution of a softer and less disagreeable epithet, than the disinterested world has chosen to bestow upon the crime.

We are very indulgent to our own faults. If we compare the feelings of compunction which disturb us, for the sins that have been known and censured by others, with those which move our hearts for the sins which, we are sure, have never been divulged, and are in no danger of being divulged; we shall find in the comparative littleness of the latter, a strong proof of, how much our consciences follow the decisions of popular opinion, in their awards of innocence or, guilt. He that succeeds in inducing mankind to adopt a milder name for his vice, than it merits to bear, has gone so far towards quieting the agitations of his remorse. His own reflections upon the offence, were there no other bosoms than his, to tranquilize would afford him but little uneasiness. When the affair is spoken of, in terms of less harshness, than he had just reasons to apprehend, he finds, in the easy construction of the people, an apology which from the first, had been used by himself. To say of a man drunk, that he is somewhat elated; of a miser, that he uses a provident economy; of the gross sensualist that he is over come by the weakness of nature, is but to confound things which are entirely distinct, and so to prevent the plain object of speech, as to familiarise ourselves with habits, we should otherwise view with abhorrence. OBITUARY.

Died, in this town, on Monday morning last, Mrs. MARY C. WILSON, consort of Jacob C. Wilson, Esq. in the 35th year of her age.

To mourn the departure of hoary headed age and tottering decrepitude, seems natural and inevitable, and grief is despoiled of half its keenness; soothed and and mellowed by the reflection, that they were full in years and honours. But to be called upon to pay the last tribute of respect, to the youthful and good, prematurely cut off, enlists our tenderest sympathies, and were not the Christian's hope of meeting hereafter, written by the finger of Deity, on every heart our grief would be inconsolable.

The subject of this notice, was endeared to her friends and relatives by urbanity, kindness and affection, emanating from high moral and religious principles; these made her dear in life and triumphant in death. After a lingering illness, which she bore with great patience, she welcomed the grim monster with the familiarity of a friend: Thus verifying in her last moments, the exclamation of one of the sainted fathers of the Church, the dying Christain shames the pomp of death!

"In this misguided world, they picture death
A fearful tyrant;—O believe it not!
It is an angel, beautiful as light,
That watches o'er the sorrowing spirits here—
And when its weary pilgrimage is done,
Unbars the heavy gates of everlasting life,
And vanishes forever."

LADIES' FANCY

SHOE STORE.

(WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.)

27 W. Lexington st. between Park and Howard sts.

WILLIAM CUASE, respectfully informs the ladies of Baltimore and his numerous friends, that he still continues to manufacture and keep on hand as usual a very handsome assortment of Ladies' and Childrens' Fancy dress and Walking SHOES, all of which he will sell at his former prices, which are as low as any in the city. With having the advantage of the best materials from the first morocco factories of Philadelphia and Baltimore, he is enabled to furnish a superior article. He returns his most sincere thanks to the Ladies in particular for the very liberal encouragement he has received for the last three years, and hopes by his usual attention and endeavour to please to still continue the patronage from the public which he most respectfully solicits.

N B.—Country Merchants and others that want a superior article for retail will find it to their advantage to purchase of him, as they can select such size and kind as they may want, or have any kind or size made to order at a short notice, with the privilege of ordering from one dozen to more as may suit themselves. His work is well known in the city and requires no further recommendation.

All those indebted to me for their last year's account will please to settle the same without further delay. W. C.
