gency. We have witnessed, and are knowing to a due portion of cases, and have generally observed the disease to yield to timely advice.

Hereafter it may not be amiss to institute enquiries into the remarkable malignancy of our present atmosphere. In the mean time we would state that we find nothing provocative of it in the police of the city. We never were in a cleaner condition, and although we have at various times assumed the task of rebuking our city officers, it never has afforded us any pleasure, such as we experience in awarding to them the praise of a judicious, zealous and faithful attention to this portion of their duties, since the appearance of the epidemic amongst us.

For the Easton Gazette.

Mr. Graham:

The election is over, and the Whigs are again beaten by the Spoils party and Vanites. I suppose there was great rejoicing in your region as well as in our section of Country. It is thought some here would go stark mad with extacy at the result, but for their anxiety as to the division of spoils under the new dominion. You know they have gained the County Commissioners, and now have the dispensing of County offices. It is thought we shall have a Constable for every hog path in Pot Pye and other necks down here; and a squire for every cross-road. Some of the more ambitious of the faithful are preparing to move up into your city and commence business of a public character. It is astonishing how changed some here have become.—Men heretofore who cared nothing about politics,—were even anti Van Buren when office was given them, are now vociferous party men. I presume preparing for a bigger bite.

As usual we had the Wye House Champion down among us on the last election day. There was once raised at Wye House a celebrated colt called 'Wye Comet,' that became very distinguished and sold for a great sum of money; but really, sir, this latter produce is likely far to exceed "Wye Comet," in fame and celebrity. About a week before an election he usually makes his appearance in Pot Pye. This advent is hailed rapturously by the faithful. He then lays his plans. To look at him on such an occasion, you would think he had the weight of empire on his shoulders;—so grave and owl like doth he seem. Whilst other men are engaged in discussion and argument you will see him wink and tip this man and that—they march aside—a long conference takes place. The rendezvous is named—the programme of a grand potatoe hole frolick laid down—the house named, arrangements made. The news is then communicated by himself and others, where they wish it to be known. His invitations are very select—extended only to those whom he would like to see at his own fine mansion in Miles River. Aristocratic Whigs are entirely excluded. The grand secret is made known that the young squire of Wye, will himself be on the ground. At the time appointed they assemble—he drives up with barouch, horses and servant and the night is spent in dancing, drinking, and fiddling and such other elegant amusements. By such means he has raised for himself an immense popularity and influence.—Before day a little he puts off in his barouche. He is too aristocratic or too prudent to march up at the front of his friends and pet companions of the previous night. He leaves that for others. But he is on the green, large as a field marshal on election day. Had he the uniform on, a stranger would take him for one—he seems the soul of all that is going on. He marches to the Polls with this man—goes under a shed or shanty with another—starts his emissaries in all directions and seem to have great weight on his mind.

Now, Mr. Graham, what does all this mean? Why does this man leave the district where the laws entitle him to vote and come down here among us? There is some cause for it. I have heard of some men in old party times being sent from one district to another as bullies, to pull and drag on election days.—Surely the young squire has not come to that pass. He exhibits no spirit of the kind down here. Other men when they have been raised in a particular district and the people know them well and have confidence in them, and they have removed from that district, sometimes go there on election days thinking they may do more good for their party. Such is not the case with the young squire. We have not raised him—we know nothing of his claims to influence among us. I know no reason why he should lead us. I have never heard his voice on the stand indeavouring to carry us along to his mode of thinking by the cogency of his reasoning. He has no personal popularity based on charitable acts and deeds done during the year to the people he seems determined to fix himself on as their political guardian—He never sees or visits them except three or four days before an election. I never heard of their visiting him in turn Why is it then I repeat, that he fixes himself on us just before an election and on every election day? Let the people ponder and reflect. This system began in 1836.—In 1837 none of his stock were in the field and he did not put forth his exertions. In 1838 he was on the Rialto'—the house of 'York' being in danger—and this fall again he took the field. I find a general feeling rising among us on this subject. Many reflecting men of his own party consider it a disgrace—a reflection on the district, to have such a man, without any thing they can see to recommend him, coming among them to regulate their district.—The Whigs intend to speak out on the subject. They do not intend to worship 'a golden Calf,' as did a certain people of old; nor to let the image be again raised among them. I do think all honorable men must turn their faces on such conduct when made known to them.—The people of this district must blush to have the visit of such a man among them deemed by his party indispensable to their success. Yet such is the fact.—The district is considered safe by his admirers when he starts for our section of the county and promises to give us the light of his countenance on the day of election.—More anon on this subject.

OBITUARY.

Died, at his homestead, in the Bay Side, on the 1st inst., CHARLES SMITH, in the 77th year of his age.

He was a native of Talbot County, and one of those Eastern Shore men whose active services in the Chesapeake Bay were made so available in the Spring and autumn of 1781, just prior to the surrender of Cornwallis at York Town. He was but eighteen, when he entered, as a volunteer, on board the barges, where he remained so long as the exigency of the times rendered it necessary.

Few in our community could have been pointed out more blameless in every relation of life, and the family and friends of this worthy citizen may console themselves in the recollection of his having afforded a public example, worthy of regard and imitation.

The farm is well watered, the Christiana Creek running through it, and besides, there is a spring of excellent water in every field.
