POETRY.

From the New York Commercial Advertiser.

NAPOLEON MORIENS.

"The 5th of May came amid wind and rain. Napoleon's passing spirit was deliriously engaged in a strife more terrible than that of the elements around. The words 'tete d' armee,' the last which escaped his lips, intimated that his thoughts were watching the current of a heady fight."—Scott's Life of Napoleon, vol. 2, p. 404.

'Twas meet that mid the gath'ring roar
Of tempests wild and high,
Embattled storms and whirlwind's rush,
Napoleon should die;
Departure of such spirit stern
Should match its life's career,
And well might living thunder pour
Its volley's o'er his bier.

How else could pass the soul of him
Whose name made empires reel,
Shook Kings with awe, & crush'd their thrones
Beneath his trampling heel;
And claiming from his sword alone
Heraldic right to reign.
Joined to fair France's diadem
The crown of Charlemagne?

In that dark hour, while o'er his couch
The raging storm swept by,
And hissing lightnings flash'd along
The midnight of the sky,
The hero left his prison isle,
And, mantled in the blast,
In spirit free exulting held
Communion with the past.

Proudly he saw that hour of fame
Which from the Alpine height
Beheld out spread the fair extent
Of Italy the bright;
That hour—when borne upon the gale—
The 'larum of his drum
Told ancient Harpsburg's haughty house
The doom of fate had come.

Again unroll'd, his victor flag
Abroad its splendor flings
As crest display'd it floated o'er
The tombs of Egypt's Kings;
In the fierce lightning's lurid blaze
He marks the sheeted flame
Which rose on high o'er Toulon's fall,
And Moscow's redder name.

Welcomes his ear the clang once more
Of his war eagle's wings,
While loud thro' smoke and sulphurous cloud,
His note of conquest rings;
The convent walls of Spain's Madrid,
The city of the Czar,
From where the Baltic rolls its flood,
Give back the din of war.

He hears amid the pealing loud,
Of thunder, swelling high,
The vengeful cannon's music roll
And trumpet's charming cry.
Once more he led his thousands on,
O'er prostrate nations trod,
And girt with armies, stood again
Old Europe's 'Battle God.'

But while from mem'ry's caverns deep
Past scenes of glory rise,
And tumults of an hundred fights
Before his dying eyes;
Falters his tongue—his lips the 'charge'
To utter feebly tried,
And thus, 'mid storms and tempests wild,
The World's Great Captain died. C.

HOUSE AND LOT IN OXFORD FOR SALE.

The subscriber will dispose of, on reasonable terms, the above property, situated in Talbot county, near the junction of Third Haven Creek, with Choptank River. The House is large and commodious, and most conveniently planned. It has been thoroughly repaired, is now in complete order, and has attached to it, entirely, new, all the necessary out buildings for a family, viz: a Carriage house, Corn house, Hay house, Granary and Stable—the fencing with a Pump is also new.

It is perhaps, one of the most delightful country residences on this Shore, as it is believed not to be excelled by any for beauty or health, and is surrounded by a fine country—added to which, the Steam Boat Maryland, in her passages to and from Baltimore, twice in every week, stops almost at the door, and not only affords a convenient means of travelling, but also produces an agreeable variety.—The situation, is likewise well calculated for a Seminary of Learning, either Male or Female, and might be most advantageously used for that purpose, by any one calculated to manage it.

Persons wishing to purchase, or examine the property will please call on the subscriber.
