son—We think we shall hear no more from the Vanites of Gen. Harrison's cowardice or want of military talents.

Mr. JAMES A. RIDGWAY, has been appointed Agent for the Eastern Shore and Delaware, for that old and standard work, the "AMERICAN FARMER," edited by John S. Skinner, Esq. and published in the city of Baltimore, by Samuel Sands, Esq.,—and is authorised to receive subscriptions and make collections for the same.

The Burlington Silk Worm Frame.—We call the attention of those engaged in the Silk Culture, to the Frame, Advertised by Mr. Leeds, of Philadelphia invented by Mr. Edmund Morris, of N. J., for the feeding, &c. of the Silk Worm; a full description of which is given in the Journal of the American Silk Society for August, 1840.

The Van Buren party on Tuesday last, nominated the following, as their ticket, for this county.

For the Legislature.—James Ll. Martin, William W. Lowe, William B. Willis.

Commissioners.—A. B. Harrison, Haddaway Leonard.

The Whigs of Somerset County have nominated the following ticket.

For the Legislature.—John Parsons, Dr. Wm. Williams, Isaac D. Jones, Noah Rider.

County Commissioners.—Wm. T. G. Polk, Wm. Miles, (of S.)

The Herald says that the Whigs of Somerset intend doing their WHOLE DUTY this time. The Whigs may therefore expect a large majority.

The Whigs of the city of Baltimore nominated on Monday last the following ticket.

For Mayor.
Gen. SHEPARD C. LEAKIN.
For State Senator.
JAMES L. RIDGELY.
For the House of Delegates.
T. YATES WALSH,
Dr. STEPHEN COLLINS,
THOMAS SEWELL,

ROBERT PURVIANCE. Senr.

For the Easton Gazette.

Mr. Graham.—I read with some interest, a week or two since in your paper, a short communication from Louisville by a former resident of our Eastern shore. His remarks on the success of the good cause in the west is cheering, and his congratulations on our efforts here, mark a noble spirit of emulation. I could not but be forcibly struck by his passing observations on the character of Amos Kendall and they coincide so nearly with my own opinion, that although unused to the writing mood, and have hands more fitted to labour than to wield a pen; yet such is the glaring imposition trying to be practised by that man, on the credulous and unthinking, that every lover of truth however small his capacity, should feel an interest in exposing him in his true colours.

There is no reasonable man, uninfluenced by the meanest party motives can look at the game he is now playing without feelings nearly allied to hatred and contempt. Hatred for his rank hypocrisy, and contempt for his barefaced calculation on the peoples ignorance.—On leaving the Post Office Department he modestly asserts that his health at this particular time is rather precarious, and for the sake of occasional writing and exercise, which he assures us is very beneficial; he has consented to undertake the editorship of the Extra Globe (to enlighten us poor ignorant mortals, as to our duty in supporting this most democratic administration,) and then goes on to state that he has not been able to make a fortune in his late vocation, which is to satisfy all skeptics, that his motives are purely disinterested. Now I would ask can there be any so dull of apprehension as not to see through all this trash what he is aiming at, which is to raise himself to still higher office and reward, and that at the expense of truth and every virtue.

The truth of this may be seen in almost the first thing he parades before the public in his address, which is that General Harrison is either in a cage, or surrounded so by keepers that it is impossible to arrive at what will be his course if elected President. In the face of every testimony from every quarter under heaven, letters to distinguished individuals, the published speeches of General Harrison, and his repeated declarations, Kendall has seized upon this exploded charge on which to found one of his chief arguments against the peoples candidate.

He knew there was no ground for this accusation, and that it was forsaken by the most of his party for some other loop to hang a falsehood; yet in his emazing perception of the gullibility of the people, he thought it too good to be lost. This shows how utterly devoid of all honesty that man must be, who can stoop to retail second hand, the basest slanders to subserve the interests of a dominant party.—And yet there are those who are determined to swallow any thing from such a polluted source, and let their prejudices blind their better reason, notwithstanding I believe many candid friends of the administration cannot look at such low attempts to injure the fair fame of General Harrison without feelings of disgust and shame. And so it is with all the charges brought by Kendall; and although he uses every method his prolific brain can suggest to sustain his positions, yet there is such a want of candour such a desire for party effect, and such an overweening solicitation in upholding a bad cause, on which he has staked his all, that his shafts fall harmless at the old General's feet, and leaves himself exposed in all his naked deformity, to the gaze of an insulted people.

If it is not high time that all honest men should pause in the support of a government that requires such measures to sustain it, I know not when the time will arrive. Desperate cases, they say, require desperate remedies, & I am sure the remedies they are applying will only serve to injure the wounds already inflicted on our bleeding country, but they will make the friends of Harrison more firm in his support, bring many a recruit to the good cause, and then the antidote will be administered to produce a healthy reaction.

I would call on my fellow labourers, I mean the working men, to survey the measures of the general Government for a few years past, the measures and effects, not their promises and professions, and they must come with me to the same conclusion, that every thing has tended to the destruction of the poor man's hopes, and we are silently, but no less rapidly, verging to a monarchial Government in every thing but the name, and that too, under the shield of a false democracy.

The march of power is ever onward, and it is worthy of notice that the encroachments made by the Executive has been by almost imperceptible degrees, and the chains are forged for the people before they are aware of their danger.—The most plausible constructions are put on, and reasons given for the most tyrannical proposals and enactments that ever disgraced a republic, and if it were possible for the present dynasty to continue in power, humble as is my station, I should seriously fear for my liberties.

We can look on almost every Institution connected with the interest of the people throughout the country, & see that they have been assailed by every weapon and tongue of the Van Buren party. Commerce, once so flourishing is nearly prostrate, Merchants ruined, thousands of Mechanics thrust out of employment and roaming through the country, are the effects of a system, which may be traced to the ruinous policy of the general Government. From Jackson's veto of the United States Bank, nearly twelve years ago, to the establishment of Van Buren's Sub-Treasury, there has been a continual drain on the poor man's pocket and a continued diminution of wages. Year after year has he looked for the promised plenty, but alas! that hope which looked to the party in power for relief, and which had held out the golden talisman, has failed and died

The system of Credit, which this same party affect to despise, and by which many a poor man with nothing but honesty and industry to recommend him, has attained wealth and means to educate his children, and fit them for any station in life, has been nearly annihilated and destroyed. This hostility to Credit, which is so beneficial to the rich, and so detrimental to the poor but enterprising man, is to pave the way to the grand climax, for men of money and large capital to invest their funds in manufactures throughout the country, the effect of which will be to banish all competition and create monopolies. A man then with little or no capital, whatever may be his talents for business, will have a small chance for establishing himself & his only hope may be to work for the rich at a small sum per day, which may not exceed what they get in Europe.

With my poor intellect, I cannot help seeing some indications of this state of things, in the first reported speech of Mr. Buchanan and in the declarations of Senator Tappan to a manufacturer in Ohio, both of which Gentlemen have vainly tried to give another colour to their assertions and would have us now believe when they find the people not quite prepared for their European system, that they harbour no such sentiments. But there is no need of their testimony to show the consummation of the scheming party at the head of our Government.

In connection with this war against the workingman's prosperity, the great project - a Government Bank, miscalled subtreasury, after being repeatedly condemned by the people, has been at length, after tremendous efforts brought to pass both houses, and is now the law of the land. This great machine, will in course of time, wield such an influence, as utterly to destroy all state institutions, or only make them subservient to the reigning executive, when will tend still more to concentrate power where there is too much already.

To crown the whole, here comes a proposal from the Secretary of War which if I understand Mr. Van Buren's message, is sanctioned by him, although I see he is trying to get out of that scrape, to raise an army of two hundred thousand fighting men, one fourth to be in actual service and the rest ready at a moment's warning, to repel any invasion or insurrection.

Can any one conceive any thing more tyrannical than this would have been, if it had become a law, as recommended. What use might not be made of such a power by an over ambitious chief Magistrate. And how would it agree with our feelings, say nothing of equipping ourselves at our own expense, to be dragged hundreds of miles from our homes, to meet some fancied invasion, or perhaps quell some rebellion against his arbitrary power. I am told that the President recently declared Mr. Poinsett's plan unconstitutional, which is very much like him, now he finds it so obnoxious, but can the people ever forget that he recommended it most earnestly in his message I think it will take even more than the wily Amos Kendall himself to get any of us to swallow this last dose, and although the most wonderful efforts are making to keep a party in power that advocate such measures as are destructive to our dearest rights, yet I am confident that our country, through the intelligence and patriotism of the people will emerge from the desolation that threaten us, and only shine with more lustre and security, under the reign of Harrison and Reform.

I have given my views in plain style and would ask my fellow labourers, for to that class I belong, to look well to themselves, look at the effects and follow them to their source, and remedy the evils by applying votes to displace men in power, who have too long wielded it to our destruction. Respectfully yours.

A HARD WORKING MAN.

IRISHMEN, READ THIS.

The St. Louis Republican of a recent date, published a spirited address to the Sons of the Emerald Isle, of which the following is an extract. We invite particular attention to its assertions, which will effectually disprove the slander that Gen. Harrison is opposed to the interests of immigrants.

'There is a fact, in the history of General WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON, that of itself, should be sufficient to win our gratitude and respect. Most of us are familiar with the history of the bloody revolution of 1790. Hundreds of our countrymen fled to the United States, as an asylum, from the ruthless persecutions which were then inflicted upon them. In the city of New York, the number became so large, that it was found necessary to form a society for their relief. It was called the 'New York Irish Emigrant Society." At the session of Congress, in 1816'17, the Society petitioned Congress for a grant of land to their countrymen, who where then destitute, having lost all their property in the rebellion. The question was debated in Congress, and the petition was rejected by a majority of twelve votes. Among those who advocated the measure, and whose name is recorded among the yeas, stands the name of WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON, now a candidate for President. In the remarks that he made on that occasion, he repudiated the idea that is often entertained, that the influx of foreign emigration would be dangerous to the liberties of the country. He was willing to extend to them a helping hand—to relieve the destitute—and to contribute our public domain to those who had suffered as martyrs in the cause of liberty. This one act of General Harrison—performed at a time when the sincerity of his motives cannot be impeached—should commend him to the favourable regard of every United Irishman. At the coming elections, let us prove 'THAT IRISHMEN NEVER DESERT AN OLD FRIEND IN TIME OF NEED.'

HARRISON STATE CONVENTION

The friends of HARRISON & REFORM in the State of Maryland, will hold a general Convention and Festival at Hagerstown, on Wednesday the 16th day of September next the undersigned Committee are now engaged in making the necessary arrangements for receiving and entertaining their fellow citizens on the occasion Distinguished guests are expected from various sections of the country; and the committee will spare no pains in securing the presence of the good, the wise, and the eloquent, for the purpose of fully and ably discussing the important political topics which now agitate, and so vitally concern the public.

Our fellow citizens from all parts of the State of Maryland, and from the adjoining States and the District of Columbia, are respectfully and earnestly invited to attend and participate in the proceedings and festivities of the day. The Harrison and Tyler Electoral Candidates of the State are all expected to be present, and the Tippecanoe Clubs, and other delegations from the several counties and adjoining States, and from the several districts of Washington County are requested to come with their emblems, badges and banners

All will be welcomed with open hands and congenial hearts. There will be room and substantial Log Cabin fare for all that will favor us with their presence and unite with us in the patriotic effort to rid our beloved Republic and country of a most corrupt, profligate and tyrannical administration, and to place at the head of affairs, one whose wisdom in council has conferred such signal benefits upon our land, and whose arm has been so oft and successfully raised in its defence. Let us glory in the character and services of our public benefactors Let us prove that Republics are NOT ungrateful, and though others may delight in deriding the poverty of the war-worn patriot, and slandering the name and fame of one of the best and purest of men let us but cherish him the more in our affections, and be the more determined to reward him with a Nation's GRATITUDE and HONORS.

The Burlington Silk Worm.

FRAME.

This simple yet complete apparatus for feeding Silk Worms, invented and patented by Mr. Edmund Morris of Burlington, N. J., has been found, after repeated trial, to accomplish the following important objects:—

1. It secures the most thorough ventilation to all parts of the frame on which the worms are feeding, below as well as above, and obliges them, of necessity, to clean themselves of their excrement and other rubbish

2. That part of all former modes of feeding which requires waiting for the worms to mount upon fresh foliage in order to clean them, is entirely dispensed with; and though cleaning is never necessary, yet should the worms require changing it is done almost instantly, a thousand at a time, and without the worms being conscious of the change.

3. The whole apparatus is as portable as a quilting frame; and all the parts which require handling during the feeding season, are as portable as an umbrella, without being liable to breakage.

4. Ventilation and cleanliness are so perfectly accomplished, that disease seems to be out of the question, unless originating in the egg.

5. The age (from the spinning) of any number of cocoons, from one thousand up to a million, is identified to a day, and they are gathered with six times the facility of the hurdle system, at the same time coming out perfectly clean, and with but little floss.

6. By using branches, cut down with a grass hook or scythe, it saves more than one half the usual expense of gathering foliage and feeding it out to the worms, and more of them are accomodated in the same space

7. It is cheaper and more durable than the hurdles. All the purchaser is required to do after receiving his frames, is to put in a few nails to support his uprights, every thing else, including the spinning apparatus, is complete to his hand

The vast superiority of this over all other fixtures for feeding silk worms, is such, as to be apparent even to persons not acquainted with the rearing of them; while intelligent gentlemen, practically conversant with the business, have pronounced, without a single exception, that it fully accomplishes all that has been said above. It has been tried repeatedly and found successful in practice, and is now (September) in full operation at the Burlington Cocoonery, on a large scale, where persons interested in the silk business are invited to examine into its merits. It rejects the hurdle system entirely, and is original in all its parts. A Frame sufficient to feed 12,000 worms, may be seen at the United States Silk Agency, No. 2 Franklin Place, the undersigned proprietor of which has been appointed agent for the sale of frames and rights, to whom, or to the patentee at Burlington, application may be made. An engraved view, with a full description, will be sent on application, post paid. Gentlemen about to erect cocooneries will find it highly important to examine the capabilities of this Frame, previous to erecting any other fixtures.
