Poetry.

I LOVE THE SPRING.

I love the Spring—her bursting buds and flowers,
The blue bird whistling in her leafy bowers,
The waters laughing with a merry sound,
That late were mute, in icy fetters bound.

I love the Spring—whose blossom-bearing trees
Sweet perfume waft on every passing breeze;
When every pulse beats joyously and high,
And gentle hearts warm at her fragrant sigh.

I love the Spring—when snow drops slily peep
From the white mantle of their wintry sleep;
When purple violets to earth are given,
And blue-bells whisper hope, in hues of heaven.

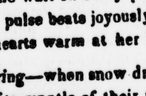

I love the Spring—for then the bright-plumed birds
Pour richer melodies than human words;
And each frail straw, borne to the cherished nest,
Teaches a lesson of domestic rest.

I love the Spring—it is the time to roam
In those still haunts where Nature makes her home;
Where frowning rocks look down on silent streams
As on a mirror, giving back their beams.

I love the Spring—e'en when the lightning's flash,
And deep-toned thunders deafen by their crash
Or April rains dispel our rising fears,
Like some pale beauty smiling through her tears.

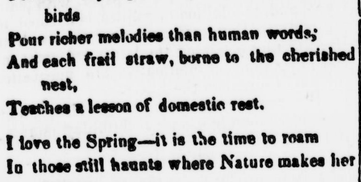

I love the Spring—no more the homeless child
Shall coldly shiver in the tempest wild.
Benignant Spring! thou art the poor man's friend,
And I will love thee till my life shall end.
