The Rev. J. W. French of the Episcopal Church, was elected Chaplain to Congress on Wednesday last.

THE NOMINATION.—The selection of the Hon. WILLIAM COST JOHNSON, as the Whig Candidate for Governor, meets the universal approbation of the Whig party. Mr. Johnson's unwerving fidelity to the cause which we believe is essentially connected with the welfare of the country, & his distinguished public services have endeared him to the Whigs of Maryland; and his opponents have ever awarded him their praise for his enlarged and liberal views, commanding talents, and inflexible honesty. Shoulder to shoulder with the master-spirits of the age, he has stood upon the battlements of the Constitution, and successfully beat back the Mamelukes of power, and when the reachings of an ambitious executive threatened the destruction of this happy Union, his was the first voice to sound the alarm—his the first hand to rear the banner of the Constitution, and his the arm that was raised to strike to the dust the tyrant that should dare violate its sanctity. Under that banner he has continued to fight, and has now the proud consolation of seeing the Ægis of our rights restored to its pristine vigor, and tyranny humbled before the indignant frowns of an outraged people.

Around one so worthy, so talented and patriotic, we believe the Whigs will rally in their utmost strength. The time for disunion has gone by. The mortifying result of the last Gubernatorial convass should teach us a lesson which we should treasure up in all time to come. That result was embittered by the reflection that the Whigs were the authors of their own defeat, and we believe they will profit by the experience. Under the influence of an enlighted public sentiment the Whigs have recently achieved a most gratifying victory in this State, and if they will, as we believe, but extend to Mr. Johnson the generous support which he so eminently merits, they will be able to bury Van Burenism with its face downwards and write upon its back, "no resurrection" While our opponents are engaged in a reckless and indiscriminate struggle for place, we should not loose sight of those important principles for which we have been engaged in a twelve years's doubtful and laborious contest—principles by which we hoped to reinstate the violated Constitution, the injured morals, and tarnished glory of the country.

"While they do labor for their own preferment,
Behooves it us to labor for the realme."

* * *

The Loco Foco Convention which met in Baltimore, on Thursday last, we understand, nominated the Hon. Francis Thomas, of Frederick, as their candidate for Governor of this State.

INDOLENCE.—No greater mistake is ever made than when we are told by unreflecting people, that a state of repose and indolence is natural and desirable to all men. If this be ever the case, it can be predicted of those alone in the lowest grade of humanity. A New Hollander, or a Hottentot, may possibly be content to crawl on in the mire of sloth and brutality, until compelled by irresistible necessity to bestir himself: there is nothing so alluring in the condition of these poor creatures as to make them objects of imitation. But with a refined and cultivated mind, and a station, however modest, provided it be without the reach of the calls of compulsory duty, one has entailed upon him a most restless and troublesome companion, in the shape of a constant goading desire to be occupied. This harpy pursues the unemployed, and vitiates the banquet of tranquil life, at which they would fain recline themselves.—Knowing that they are liable to its attacks, if caught in idleness, it is amusing to see by what pitiful contrivances people attempt to deceive themselves into a belief that they are busy. Pastimes and amusements are encumbered with regulations—and pleasures made formal and heavy. Importance is attached to the most trifling occurrences of 'life's dull round;' and the rules of etiquette and punctilio are enforced by the severest penalties. Although occupied in nothing real, useful, or rational—yet "that nothing" must always be transacted at the most critical period of the day, and with all due observances of place and circumstance, or the charm will not work.—The man of leisure becomes, in consequence, often metamorphosed into the most bustling, anxious repository of little paltry cares. Cheated of his own quiet, he keeps the most watchful, jealous look out upon the repose of his neighbours,—and wo be to the unfortunate slumberer upon whom he inflicts his presence.

To the state of listlessness and irresolution, invariably attendant upon habits of indolence, the most dreaded evils often owe their origin. Up rise spectres, haunting the distempered imagination. Refuge from these is sought in strong excitement, which is succeeded by moping, nervous melancholy. Indigestion, with its train of woes, is induced by two great attention to the only regular business of the day—eating and drinking. If some hasty malady does not prevent, suicide is too often looked to as the only refuge from ennui. But where the sufferer is doomed to linger on in his long disease, he can know neither pleasure nor repose. The full coloring and contrast, which labor and occupation give to the picture, are wanting and there remains but an unmeaning—an insipid blank.—Sleep flies his pillow—and enjoyment from the most alluring of his pastimes. A mere passenger in the ship of life, his sickly existence is passed in disgust and nothingness.

Females, both by constitution and education, are particularly liable to suffer from the passive state induced by overrefinement. So much is present to exprivate their native delicacy and timidity, that they overlook the danger arising from these being morbidly increased.—Ever busied with unnumbered details they have frequently no one engrossing occupation. Leaning for support on some loved relative, and deluded by the hope that they may so continue secure and blameless, they too often prepare neither for the disappointments nor the duties of real life. The willing homage of the protecting sex raises them above the thoughts and cares of the busy world. They seldom, if ever, told of the uncertain tenure of sickly beauty's "frail and feverish being;"—and they hear not the "still small voice" of nature, which warns them to be women. Untried, and close concealed, the character fails in stamina and spontaneous power, while from deficient exercise, the constitution becomes incapable of resisting the slightest shock; and the body, unequally and prematurely expanded in the sultry drawing-room, is destitute of the symmetrical proportions of real beauty. When these fair ones are called upon to be wives and mothers, they are often found to be doubly wanting—like frail and tender flowers, removed from the genial atmosphere of a hot house, they droop and wither at the first touch of misfortune's chilling blast.

REPORTS FROM THE DEPARTMENTS.

We avail ourselves of the earliest opportunity of continuing the publication of the Official Papers which accompanied the Message of the President to Congress, in the form of Reports of the Heads of Departments.

The first in the series, is the Report of the Secretary of War, the part of it most interesting, by the additional information which it imparts to the Public, being what concerns the protracted hostilities in Florida, which we regret to learn are yet not far advanced towards their termination.

From this report we learn the interesting fact that; upon the accession to office of a Whig Administration, not a moment of time was lost in directing all the means at the disposal of the War Department to be employed upon the fortifications and other works for the protection of the Atlantic frontier, in the manner deemed best calculated to produce the greatest possible efficiency in the shortest time. The Executive has thus done every thing that depends upon it to repair a continued negligence of the public defences, to which recent circumstances in our foreign relations have had the effect to attract more than usually the public attention. It is for Congress to second and sustain this laudable purpose of the Executive.

The abuses in the several branches of the service connected with Indian affairs, which are adverted to, without being fully exposed, in the Report of the Secretary of War, have been long suspected. Their full exposure must be a work of time. One of the considerations which induced us to rejoice in the selection of Mr. Bell to preside over the War Department was a conviction that, beyond any other person thought of for the office, he was qualified and disposed to detect and reform the errors and abuses in the conduct of our relations with the Indians. We look with confidence for instructive developments on this subject at the next session of Congress.

The Report of the SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, which we this day also present to our readers, is brief, prompt, and pertinent, as might be expected from the character and business-habits of its author. With the limited experience of a single quarter's service at the head of that Department, he does not undertake to present any thing like a plan of general reform in that branch of the service; but he states, without reserve or circumlocution, his opinion that "a thorough reorganization of the Navy is demanded by considerations connected with the defence and honor of the country," & announces his hope of being able to prepare, in time to be laid before Congress at its next regular session, a comprehensive and well-digested system of reform in the Naval administration and service.

The suggestions which the Secretary makes of objects requiring attention at the present Session of Congress are few but forcible. That of the establishment of a Home Squadron will hardly meet with a dissenting voice. The scale upon which it is projected, however, by the report of the Navy Commissioners, (referred to by the Secretary,) appears to us to be entirely too contracted for its objects. Instead of two frigates, three sloops of war, and two smaller vessels, the proposed strength of a squadron intended to accomplish objects of such importance as those happily summed up in the Secretary's Report, we should approve of the establishment of a Home Squadron of at least double that force.

The Report of the POSTMASTER GENERAL also occupies a place in our columns to-day; a practical document, showing a much more careful regard for facts than for figures of speech. His figures of a different sort tell of mismanagement and improvidence in the Department of which he now has charge, but not, we confess terminating in as large a deficiency in the revenues of that office as we expected; for we had supposed the deficit to amount to something like a million of dollars, and shall not be surprised to hear, when the whole amount is ascertained, that it shall have approached that sum. We hope that Congress will incline a favorable ear to the suggestion of an appropriation of money to place the Establishment at once upon a sound footing, instead of leaving it to struggle on with its present embarrassments, consuming (as the Postmaster General very well says) its daily accuring revenues in the partial payment of old debts, and still leaving due large balances which it has not the ability to discharge.—Nat. Int.

"The report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances, &c. was yesterday transmitted to both Houses of Congress. We shall publish it entire as early as practicable. In the mean time we state, for the information of our readers that the Secretary explicity recommends the establishment of a central fiscal institution, having the leading features of a national bank."

For the Easton Gazette.

Mr. Graham:—Variety is the spice of life, says the old adage, and after the monotonous, hum drum of a tedious winter and spring, our beautiful little town has sensibly improved by a sprinkling of the aromatic, in her improved bill of fare, for a week or two past, and the presence of numerous strangers and visiters, gave quite a business air to our usually quiet streets. In the protracted session of our Court, all might have received instructions, some we conjecture learned more than was agreeable. The Corps Theatrical of the Messrs. Wagstaffs, contributed also to lighten the hearts and purses of their auditory. And then the Ladies Fair—Bright eyes and bright merchandize, caps and caresses mingled together, heartless dolls and a hearts idol, might be seen side by side and kisses of the rarest quality, both natural and artificial, with stores of other sweetmeats and sweethearts, seeming to defy the possibility of a backout, without a bargain, in one way or another, and then with a little sprinkling of election &c., a novelty, was imparted to every days entertainment not often enjoyed; but not least in interest or importance came the frequent meetings, of the Temperance Society, like the base drum in martial music it taught how to "mark time," "keep the step" and "walk a seam" if required and thanks to its humane efforts, the drunkard is reclaimed, dram drinking is unfashionable and inebriation is almost banished from our borders. But while upon this subject we would ask if the Fountains of Liquid fire are being dried up, does it not naturally follow, that new fountains of water should be opened. If our townsmen go the entire thing for cold water, why restrict them, why not have enough. A majority of our Corporation agents are teetollers, they hold dominion over the water, they can perforate our streets like a honey comb, and set pumps as thick as the Reeds in a Shepard pipe if necessary, let them act out their cold water professions. Many places in town suffer a diminution of rent for the want of good water. Opposite the Court House, on Washington street a pump would be useful; the upper end of Dover Street, needs one; the wells on the Western side of town might be improved by an increased depth of ten or fifteen feet and with trifling expense.

A little extra cost for water is of no consequence and a fire might be eminently destructive if a scarcity existed, as is sometimes the case, we repeat then, give us water, water, pure cold water in plenty and neither our stomachs or stores will suffer conflagration. M.
