voice of the people be heard. They look to their enlightened representatives for an able and enlightened Senator; for one whose voice, like that of the astute Chambers, and the accomplished Goldsborough, will be heard and respected in that distinguished body. Unawed by power—unbiassed by favor, they expect those representatives to look to the fitness of the man; and they believe that Mr. Loockerman possesses in an eminent degree those qualifications of an able jurist and an accomplished scholar, and the high-minded and honorable gentleman, which entitle him to this elevated station.

AN EASTERN-SHORE-MAN.

ACQUITTAL OF MR. RICKETTS.

—The following letter from a correspondent at Elkton, informs us of the acquittal of Mr. Ricketts, who was under trial there for killing Mr. Forward in a rencounter, on the 30th of August last:

Correspondence of the Baltimore Patriot.

ELKTON, CECIL COUNTY, MD., Oct. 28th, 1843.

The trial of Palmer C. Ricketts, editor of the Cecil Whig, indicted for killing Amor T Forwood, in this town, on the 30th of August last, commenced on Thursday, and was concluded to day, by the jury rendering a verdict of NOT GUILTY, on the ground that the act was committed in self defence. You know the principal circumstances of the unfortunate affray Mr. Ricketts and Mr. Forwood were politically opposed, and had some sharp words in the papers. They met on the 30th of August, and, as was established in evidence, Mr. F. undertook to execute a threat he had previously made, of chastising Mr. R. He (Mr. F.) commenced the attack, and struck Mr. R with a large stick he had. In the scuffle Mr. R. shot him, and of this wound he shortly after died

The defence made out so clear a case of self defence, that the jury, after a short deliberation, returned a verdict of acquittal.

Mr. R. was then discharged, and was congratulated by his friends for the honorable manner in which he had passed the ordeal.

The New York Express in speaking of the Fair of the American Institute thus states the result of the ploughing match:

The first premium, a silver cup, was awarded to the 16th entry: Eastman's (Baltimore) Cleasy Plough, driven and held by Cornelius Van Winkle, of Patterson, with his own team of oxen, one six and the other seven years old—raised the one by his father and the other by himself. He ploughed his furrow in 19 minutes an hour being the time assigned. This feat produced the most prodigious admiration on all hands, and great was the cheering from every part of the field.

The second premium, of a silver medal, was awarded to the 14th entry, William Clowes, of New Jersey,—his own team, a Bergen plough, and himself the driver; just as they came from the field, after many a season's hard use.'

The third premium was given to a Bergen plough driven by John Swan, with his own team. A diploma.

An address was delivered after the trial by the Hon. Henry Meigs. He paid several well deserved compliments to the competitors on the occasion, and the people of New Jersey in particular.

MELANCHOLY.—We copy from the Boston Journal of Wednesday afternoon the following account of a melancholy occurrence in that city:

We understand that a young Naval officer, Lieut. George J. Wyche, was apprehended last night in the street, in a state of intoxication, and conveyed to the watch house. He was a young man of unusual intelligence, possessed many fine qualities and was believed to cherish correct habits. How he was induced in this instance, to conduct himself in a manner, which led to such an unhappy result, we are not informed. But this morning when he awoke to full knowledge of his degraded situation, he was so overcome by the sad reflection, that in a fit of despair, he committed the dreadful crime of suicide, by strangling himself with his handkerchief. Mr. Wyche, was about 28 years of age, a native of Va: but more recently a resident of Alabama. May his sad fate serve as an impressive warning to others, to shun as they would deadly poison, the intoxicating cup.

FUNERAL OF LIEUT. WYCHE.

The funeral of this young naval officer, was attended, yesterday morning, from the U. S. Receiving Ship Ohio, by Commodore Downes, all the officers of the ship that could be spared from duty, with several of the friends of the deceased from the shore, and many of the seamen of the Ohio. His remains were deposited in one of the ship's boats, and this boat with five others, their flags at half mast, rowed from the Ohio to the landing place, at the Naval Hospital, Chelsea, where the remains were received by the Marine Guard, and escorted from thence to the burial ground attached to the Hospital. Here the burial sevice was read by the Rev. Addison Searle, Chaplain to the Ohio, three vollies fired over the grave, after which the procession returned to the boats, and from the landing to the ship. It was a solemn sight. A naval funeral is seldom witnessed in our harbor, and its novelty attracted the attention of every one.—Bost Journ.

The Centreville (Queen Anne's Co Md.) Times of Saturday nouces the death of an aged female colored servant, the property of Judge EARLE, and adds—

On the occasion of the funeral, which took place on the farm of Richard Earle Esq the ceremony was attended by nearly all the male member of the family and the corpse born by Col. John Tilghman, clerk of the county, Chas. C Tilghman, Pere Tilghman, Jas. T. Earle, Richard T Earle & Samuel Earle, Esqs., with as much attention to exterior show, and more of real concern than is often the acompaniment of those who have sustained a more elevated station in life.

THE RICHMOND ENQUIRER sounds the note of alarm at the terrific aspect of things. While dissentions are distracting its own ranks, the Whigs, full of energy & spirit, are moving onward in a firm, united, concentrated phalanx, determined in purpose and irresistible in strength. The Enquirer is agitatad at the sight. It proclaims its apprehensions and declares that these Whigs are a terrible set of fellows. It says:

"We must not despise the enemy, [i. e, the Whigs] at this time. We cannot disregard the strength, the fiery spirit, the sleepless ambition of Henry Clay. His friends are determined to elect him.—One of the most adroit attaches vaunted but the other night, in the Clay Club of this city, that they would carry more than 20 States. His friends profess to be as sanguine in their hopes, as they are devoted in their purposes. They are organizing to the utmost, and arming to the teeth. They are scattering Clay Clubs all over the Commonwealth. In 1840 they had but a single log cabin club in this city.—Now, they have set up a club in each ward of the city—and they intend to have one general club for the whole city. Thus far have they gone already; and, with such a reckless spirit have they commenced their operations, and they are about to register their recruits by name, and commit them to their daring cause in black and white, like the enlisted soldiers of a regular army."

It must be confessed that this looks like being in earnest, and we may admit at once that the Whigs do intend to raise Old Harry.

We are glad to learn that our Virginia friends are enlisting "recruits" in their Clay clubs. It is certainly a piece of audacity to take good democrats from under the Enquirer's very nose and enrol them among the friends of HENRY CLAY—but such things must be looked for and put up with.—American.

Legitimate Steam Engines and Steam Engines in Breeches.—We advise every one interested in the progress of events in this city, to go to pier No. 4 North River. They will there see time knocked into a cocked hat, at least so far a loading ships is concerned. The large ship Russell Glover is at that pier, & Capt. Howes begun the operation of loading her one day last week. While his stevedors were engaged in the slow process of stowing away the Cargo, a live yankee standing five feet eight inches in his boots, stepped up to Captain Howes and said—

'I rather guess, stranger, it takes some time to load a ship, with them 'are men, don't it?'

'Why, yes,' replied the Captain; 'it takes some time, but we cannot do it any faster."

'You don't say,' said the yankee.—'Well I will tell you what it is, I can load this ship in a day, and no mistake.'

'You can! exclaimed Captain Howes, giving the yankee a look, and putting on one of his most comical smiles.

'Yes,' continued the yankee. 'I have got a critter that will throw them Goods into your ship in less than no time; and I guess I'll try, if you have no objection.'

'None in the least,' said the Captain, looking rather dubiously on the cute yankee. if you wish to load the ship you can.'

Early next morning, much to the astonishment of Capt. Howes, who thought he should never see the Yankee again, a curious looking machine, somewhat like a locomotive in appearance, came down to the pier, with the live Yankee on top, getting up steam. He ran it close up to the ship, arranged the tackle and commenced hoisting in the cargo with a puff—puff—puff—before the captain, crew, or stevedores, had time to collect their scattered senses. And there the little steam engine, attended by the Yankee, is now at work, puffing as saucily as a locomotive, tipping bales and boxes into the hold of the Russell Glover, almost a ton weight at each puff with more ease, with greater facility, and three times as fast as the stevedores, with horses could do before the live Yankee made the acquaintance of Captain Howes. It has been found impossible to stow the goods away as fast as the steam engine tips them in.

This machine is a great improvement on the old system. It saves time, and in that way saves money, & it not only saves time, but it saves men also—Not so many by one half are necessary to load a ship, and thus money is saved both in time and labor.

In connection with this machine, in the annihilation of the time and Labor, there is one for the construction of Railroads that far exceeds it in power and utility. This is called the 'Excavator,' and we saw it in operation a few weeks ago in France. It goes by steam, looks like an old fashioned locomotive, and has a power equal to fifteen or twenty horses. This machine was invented by Mr. J. W. Cochrane, whose famous many-chambered cannon is already well known to us; and who is styled in the Journal des Chemins de fer, published in France 'Capitaine du genie American.' He is a live Yankee too, came from Vermont, was first noticed by the Sultan of Turkey, and is now making his fortune in France. With his 'Excavator' he is levelling hills as rapidly as the 'ship loader' throws goods into the ship, or as fast as a mower levels grass to the land He is now engaged in grading the road from Rouen to Havre, and surprises the Frenchmen with his work. It was curious to see how beautifully and rapidly the 'Excavator' would dig into a hill.—With its scoop it throws more earth into the cars in one day than a hundred smart active men can, working in the same time. Its power and utility have already been tested on the Western Railroads in this country; on the Eastern County Railroads in England, and on the road that runs from St. Petersbugh to Moscow It is to be used on all the roads now in contemplation in France; and where there are hills to teat away, the 'Excavator' is the only power that can be used with profit. Look at the operations of this 'Excavator,' and then see a hundred handfisted men at work, moving, snail like, through a hill, and you see at once which is best, which is cheapest.

We look upon these new steam engines as great auxiliaries in the movement of the world. They will produce the greatest change among the laboring classes that has yet been seen. They will throw common Laborers into more elevated employment.—N. Y. Herald.

A TYLER COAT.—We were shown yesterday, says the St Louis Republican, in the shop of Messrs. Boyle & West, a garment more appropriately named than any we have ever met with in the nomenclature of the tailors or tailoresses. A Tyler coat is a coat that may be turned as circumstances require, and worn with either side. The garment we saw was on the one side French cassimere of a drab of light color, and on the other, fine pilot cloth of a dark color.

DIED in this town on Saturday morning last, Mrs. Eliza Ann Clift, consort of Josiah Clift, in the 26th year of her age.

The many ennobling virtues that garnished the mind of the deceased were so effectually concealed beneath the envelop of modesty which she drew so closely around her, as to escape the notice of a superficial observer, but when seen by the familiar eye of an intimate friend, in humble imitation of her Divine Master upon the mount of transfiguration, she permitted them to shine with such lustre as to arrest the attention and win the sincere esteem and affection of all who thus beheld her.

DIED the 1st inst. at Avonville, the residence of Richard Trippe, Esq. after a lingering illness, which she bore with perfect resignation, Miss Mary Ennalls, in the 60th year of her age.
