FARMING

FOR SALE.

The undersigned will sell five hundred or more acres of the FARM whereon the late Andrew Skinner, of Fairview, has heretofore resided. The part now offered for sale consists of about of cleared land under a high state of cultivation, and carefully preserved by its late Proprietor; abounding with every variety of choice Timber. This Farm lies at the head of the Eastern Bay of Chesapeake, bounded on one side by Miles River and by Leeds Creek on another, both streams navigable for Vessels of any size and are celebrated for their fine Fish, Oysters and Water Fowl. From the Town of St. Michaels on the opposite side of the River, a Steam Boat and Packet run weekly to and from Baltimore. The title is indisputable, on account of its many superior advantages, its healthiness, fine soil, delightful situation and convenience to navigation, it has descended without transfer from the original Patentee under Charles Lord Baron of Baltimore to its present proprietors.

The Land offered for sale, may be conveniently divided into two small Farms each binding its whole extent on navigable water with fair proportions of cleared land and timber on each.

I also offer for Sale, also the Farm, in Miles River Neck, at present occupied by Mr. Robert S. Skinner, this beautiful little Farm is bounded on three sides by Hunting Creek, navigable for Bay Crafts, it contains about of fine Land, requires but little fencing and has a fair proportion of Oak Timber Land. For further particulars apply to CRISTOPHER HARRISON, Agent, Fair View, near Easton, Maryland.

THE IRISH POINTER.

We scarcely know when we have laughed more merrily than over the following humorous episode in the 'Loiterings of Arthor O'Leary,' by 'Harry Lorrequer.' A knowing rogue tells his own story. He had a horse. It had a trick of sinking upon its knees at the first touch of the spur, he thought of a scheme to turn this to account. He told a large party of sporting folks, in Ireland, of course, that he had a pony which set at game like any pointer. He was laughed at, and large bets taken against his success in making the pony point. Sending a cunning fellow called Tim, to warn him of the right places, he rode to the sporting scene with all the anxious betters around him.

'Before we proceeded half a mile, I saw Tim, seated on a stile, scratching his head in a very knowing manner; upon which I rode out from the party, and looking intently at the furze cover in front, called out—

'Keep back the dogs there—call them off—hush, not a word.'

The hounds were called in, the party reigned back their horses, all sat silent spectators to my movements.

When suddenly I touched Paul in both flanks, down he dropped like a parish clerk, stiff and motionless as a statue.

'What's that?' said I in a whisper.

'What's that though?' said one.

'A hare,' said I, and at the same time I shouted to lay on the dogs, and tipping Paul's ears, forward I went. Out bolted puss, and away we started across the country, I leading and taking all before me.

We killed her in half an hour, and found ourselves not far from the first cover, my friend Tim being as before in advance, making the same signal as at first. The same performance was now repeated. Paul went through his part with perfection; and notwithstanding the losses, a general cheer saluted us as we sprung to our legs, and dashed after the dogs.

Of course, I did'nt spur him: every thing now depends on my sustaining our united name and there was nothing too high or wide for that morning.

'What will you take for him Mr. O'Kelly?' was the question of each man, as he came up to the last field.

'Would you like any further proof?' said I. 'Is there any gentleman dissatisfied?

A general 'No' was the answer, and again offers were received from every quarter, while they produced their notes & settled their bets. It was no part of my game, however, to sell him; the trick might be discovered before I left the country, and if so there would'nt be a whole bone remaining in my skin.

My refusal evidently heightened both my value and his, and I sincerely believe that no story I could tell, on our ride back to town would not have met credence that morning, and indeed to do myself justice, I tried my popularity to its utmost.

By way of a short cut back, as the fair was to begin at noon, we took a different route which led across some grass fields and a small river. In traversing this, I unfortunately was at the middle of some miraculous anecdote, & entirely forgot my pony & his acquirements, and as he stooped to drink, not thinking of what I was doing, with the common instinct of a rider I touched him with the spur—Scarcely had the rowell reached his side, when down he fell, sending me headlong over his neck into the water. For a second or two the strength of the current carried me along and it was after a devil of a scramble I gained my legs, and reached the bank wet thro' and heartily ashamed of myself.

'Eh O'Kelly, what the deuce was that!' cried one of the party, as a roar of laughter broke from among them.

'Ah!' said I mournfully, 'I was not quick enough.'

'Quick enough!' cried they. 'Egad I never saw any thing like it. Why, man, you were shot off like an arrow.

'Leaped off, if you please,' said I, with an air of offended dignity—'leaped off—did'nt you see it!'

'See what?'

'That salmon to be sure. A twelve pounder, as sure as my name's O'Kelly. He set it.'

'Set a salmon,' shouted twenty voices in a breath. 'The thing's impossible.'

'Would you like to bet on it?. said I drily.

'No, no—no more bets, but surely'—

'Too provoking after all,' muttered I, 'to have lost so fine a fish, and get such a ducking!' and with that I mounted my barb, and waving my hand, wishing a good bye galloped off into Killoloe.

ELEGANT EXTRACT.—The following is an extract from an oration delivered by Dr. George W. Bethune before the Literary Societies of Dickenson's College.—The oration opens with the following fine passage:

"There is a story told somewhere, of one who came back, after a long absence, to the scenes of his youth. He had gone forth in early adventure to distant lands, and the hope of return had cheered his many years of foreign toil until the noon of life found him drawing near once more to the only spot that he ever could call home. His heart beat more and more quickly as the mountains around the village arose in the blue distance; then, as he saw the spire of the village church, or the well remembered trees grown old but still green; and then as he entered the cheerful street. Many a dwelling was familiar, though touched by time; but among the groups about their thresholds, and those who met him on the walk, there was not a face that he knew or that knew him. He passed on through the abodes of the living to the resting place of the dead; and there he found graven on stones, many names that were written on his soul. All whom he had hoped to meet again, were gone, or were buried, or had forgotten him. He was alone, a stranger in his early home. He paused to look around him. There stood the venerable edifice within which his young mind had been trained to learning. There was the green where he had leaped and shouted with his fellows. There flowed the little stream from the shaded spring which had so often slaked his summer thirst. He followed to it the path deep beaten in the sod. He stooped and took one long cool draught; his tears fell on the calm water's face; he lifted his hat from his head, breathed a prayer and departed to return no more.

'With some such emotions does your orator address you now. A score of years have passed since he left, for the urgencies of mature life, these academic shades, dear from a thousand memories of happy youth. They were then populous with his friends, and their classic exercitations were directed by the kind and paternal solicitude of teachers to whose skill and fidelity gratitude can never make sufficient payment. He has trodden the college halls again to-day, and has seen within them many happy faces in the bloom of youth; but those whom he once loved to greet with frank regard, are all gone. Some are in the grave: the rest widely scattered through a cold world, never to know again the buoyant happiness and careless wealth of affection that here blessed them and him. But thanks be to God! the fountain of truth at which they drank, still pours forth its living waters; the path to it is still deep-beaten by youthful feet, and I have come to take one draught of it with you; to send up a prayer for you to the Father of lights, who causes it to flow—and to go my way!"

ANCIENT RUINS.—A gentleman who has traversed a large portion of the Indian country of Northern Texas, and the country lying between Santa Fe and the Pacific, informs the editor of the Houston (Texas) Telegraph, that there are vestiges of ancient cities and ruined temples on the Rio Puerco and Colorado of the West. On one of the branches of the Rio Puerco, a few days travel from Santa Fe, there is an immense pile of ruins that appear to belong to an ancient temple. The building occupies nearly an acre of ground—portions of the wall are still standing consisting of large blocks of limestone regularly hewn, and laid in cement. The ruins bear a general resemblance to those of Palenque or Otolun. There are many similar ruins on the Colorado of the West, which empties into the Californian sea. Neither the Indians resident in the vicinity, or the oldest Spanish settlers of the nearest settlements can give an account of the origin of these buildings.

Intolerance of Ignorance.—After reading the following, the reader will conclude with us, that it is no wonder Berks county remains locofoco. It reminds us that a few years ago the Reverend H. A. Muhlenberg's ticket for Congress, in the same county, was headed 'Muhlenberg and no free schools.'

The following from the Reading Gazette, a neutral paper, presents the latest instance of ignorance and intolerance occurring within its borders:

'Some six months ago, several young gentlemen members of the Episcopal Church in this place undertook the formation of a Sunday School, in Maiden-creek township, about 6 miles from town. They encountered much opposition from some of the good people living in that neighborhood, but persevering in their laudable undertaking, succeeded at length in establishing quite a large School.—With some trifling interruptions from these persons in the way of breaking the windows of the room occupied for the purpose, and some other equally decent expressions of disapprobation, they were suffered to 'pursue the even tenor of their way,' until within the last week, when the ill will of their enemies, heretofore principally confined to words manifested itself in deeds. The School Room was barricaded, and our young friends were refused admittance any longer, with the threat that if they did not discontinue their visits, they (the valiant enemy) would shoot them! To crown the whole, the greater part of a valuable Library, which had just been purchased for the use of the children, was stolen!

RICH.—Gold mines of great value, have been found in Cuba, and speculators are going into them in earnest. The island is also valuable for its copper mines, and Brother Jonathan ought to keep an eye on it.
