From the U. S. Gazette.

MR. CLAYS' ELECTI N SURE—MR. VAN BUREN, MR. CALHOUN, AND GENERAL CASS.

We hear from various quarters rumors of movements among the Locofocos, and they reach us in a shape which seems to justify belief in a considerable portion of their details

It is said by some that the disaffection of Mr. Rives was only the premonitory sympton, if indeed, it should not rather be regarded as the accompanying evidence of general defection, and that the condition which that gentleman made on which he should sustain Mr. Clay viz: the nomination of Mr. Van Buren, has been so generally responded to by the members of the Locofoco party, that a desire from certain quatters, hitherto deemed impregnable for Van Buren, has been expressed to try some other man. And the rumor proceeds still further to say, that Mr. V. Buren has signified to some of his friends his determination (scarcely his willingness,) to forego the honor of nomination if such a sacrifice is deemed necessary to the defeat of Mr. Clay. Mr. Cass, Mr. Buchanan, and Mr. Calhoun are spoken of as likely to be the candidates from whom the Baltimore Convention will chose.

How much credit is to be attached to these rumors, we are unable to say. It is probable, however, that they are the offspring of the peculiar state of the old Van Buren party and may be taken rather as the evidence of approaching defeat, than of any settled means either to ward off the danger, or break the fall.

These rumors however, give rise to inquiry among the doubtful, and slight apprehension among those who feel the weakness of their middle position, now about to avow themselves for Mr Clay, followers of the strongest men, cliques & their exponents, who sit upon the eminence that overlooks the field, and are ready to cry out for Hector or Achilles, as the battle may go. We would, however, strengthen the weak, confirm the doubting, and cheer onward the old uncompromising friends of Mr Clay, with what appears to us the state of matters

We do not doubt that the North & the South have been in treaty, and that the South has demanded from its brother Locofocos of the North the absolute relinquishment of Mr. Van Buren and that a certain epistle of Mr. Calhoun has been retained revised & re-written to meet in part the wishes of the Locos of the North We do not doubt that Mr. Buchanan, ever since his declination, has been asked of, and we know that efforts have been made, to present General Cass favorably to the people.

But Mr. Van Buren is not driven from the field, even if he has been contemplating a decent passage for retreat; and even though he had declined, and any one of the above named gentlemen were to receive the nomination of the Baltimore Convention It is evident that Henry Clay is too strong for all the force that could be gathered after May & that the vantage ground has already been taken by his friends, who can maintain themselves against all combined force, without danger of defeat or the necessity of relinquishing a single inch of position, and they have, too, the still further advantage of ability to separate and thus weaken to utter defeat their foe, by concessions to one or the other ingredient of the combination, that would withdraw that part from the conflict. Let that be borne in mind.

The true battle to be fought, and that which is really to be fought, is the Clay men against the Van Buren men; and that is the strongest opposition which our opponents have to make to Mr Clay — And though we entertain not a doubt of the result, yet we say in the spirit of candor that Mr. Van Buren is the only formidable candidate upon which the Locos can rally.

It is, we repeat it, too late to compromise; and the very weakness which dictates such a course, would be made pitifully manifest when the attempt should be made to rally the South for General Cass, or the North and West for Mr. Calhoun. We do not say that either of the former would not make a good candidate started early and given the benefit of a party organization and, of certain concessions to local feelings; but however gracefully Mr. Van Buren may decline that grace is only negative, and gives no force to his rival, and only transfers the mortification of defeat, and augments that mortification by diminishing the number of which the minority is composed.

Let our opponents negotiate among themselves. So long as the present friends of Henry Clay are true to themselves & their cause, they have no cause to fear defeat. The movements of our opponents show their weakness; and Mr Van Buren will never relinquish the Baltimore nomination, (which he really holds as much as Mr. Clay does that of the Whig party,) until he has satisfied them he transfers defeat with the nomination.

We have said, and we repeat it here, Mr. Van Buren is stronger than either of his Locofoco rivals. He is strong in the personal attachment of his friends, strong in his party position, strong in his use of party machinery, strong in the friendship and support of General Jackson; and of course he knows this as well as his friends, and he never will relinquish the advantage of that nomination, until he shall be satisfied that his election is impossible and he has sense enough to know, what must be so evident to all, that whatever may be the advantage which either General Cass or Mr. Calhoun may have in certain sections and with certain cliques, yet the very change which shall transfer the nomination from him (Mr. Van Buren,) to either of them, will be such a confession and evidence of weakness that will amount to party ruin; and the letter of withdrawal from Mr. Van Buren will seal beyond the power of doubt or treason, the election of Henry Clay.

LETTER FROM MR. WEBSTER

The long expected letter from Daniel Webster will be found below. It is in answer to a letter from over a thousand citizens of New Hampshire requesting permission to use his name as a candidate for the Presidency. Mr. Webster declines the intended honor, in a manner alike manly, patriotic, and honorable to himself. We take it from the Boston Courier of Monday.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3, 1844.

Gentlemen:—I have received your letter, requesting permission to present my name to the People, as a candidate for the office of President of the U States, subject to the future wise, deliberate action of the Whig National Convention of 1844.

It would be disingenuous to withhold an expression of the grateful feelings awakened by a letter, containing such a request so very numerously signed, and coming from among those who have known me through life. No one can be insensible to the distinction of being regarded, by any respectable number of his fellow citizens, as among those from whom a choice of President might be made, with honor and safety to the country.

The office of President is an office, the importance of which cannot be too highly estimated He who fills it necessarily exercises a great influence, not only on all the domestic interests of the country, on its foreign relations, and the support of its honor and character among the nations of the earth, but on that, which is of the very highest import to the happiness of the people, the maintenance of the Constitution itself, and the prosperous continuance of the government under it. Our systems are peculiar; and while capable, as experience has shown of producing the most favorable result, under wise and cautious administration, they are nevertheless exposed to peculiar dangers.—We have six and twenty states, each possessing within itself powers of government, limited only by the Constitution of the U States; and we have a general government to which is confided high trusts, to be exercised for the benefit of the people of all the States. It is obvious that this division of powers, itself the result of a novel and most delicate political operation, can be preserved only by the exercise of wisdom and pure patriotism. The Constitution of the United States stands on the basis of the people's choice. It must remain on that basis so long as it remains at all. The veneration and love, which are entertained for it, will be increased, by every instance of wise, prudent, impartial and parental administration.

On the other hand, they will be diminished by every administration which shall cherish local divisions, devote itself to local interests, seek to bend the influence of the Government to personal or partizan purposes, or which shall forget that all patriotism is false and spurious which does not look with an equal eye to the interests of the whole country, and all its parts present and to come. I hardly know what an American statesman should so much deprecate, on his own account as well as on account of his country, as that the constitution of the United States now the glory of our country and the admiration of the world, should become weakened in its foundations, perverted in its principles, or fallen and sunk in a nation's regard and a nation's hopes by his own follies errors, or mistakes.

The Constitution was made for the good of the country; this the people know. Its faithful administration promotes that good; this the people know. The people will themselves defend it against all foreign power, and all open force, and they will rightfully hold to a just and solemn account, those, to whose hands they commit it, and in whose hands it shall be found to be shorn of a single beam of its honor or deprived of a particle of its capacity for usefulness It was made for an honest people, and they expect it to be honestly administered. At the present moment, it is an object of general respect confidence and affection.

Questions have arisen, however, and are likely to arise again, upon the extent of its powers, or upon the line which separates the function of the General Government from those of the State Governments; and these questions will require whenever they may occur, not only firmness, but much discretion, prudence and impartiality in the Head of the national Executive. Extreme counsels or extreme opinions on either side would be very likely, if followed or adopted, to break up the well adjusted balance of the whole. And he who has the greatest confidence in his own judgment, or the strongest reliance on his own good fortune, may yet be well diffident of his ability to discharge the duties of this trust in such a manner as shall promote the public prosperity, or advance his own reputation.

But gentleman, while the office of President is quite too high to be sought by personal solicitation, or for private ends and objects, it is not to be declined, if proffered by the voluntary desire of a free people.

It is now more than thirty years since you and your fellow citizens of New Hampshire, assigned me a part in political affairs. My public conduct since that period is known. My opinions on the great questions, now most interesting to the country, are known. The constitutional principles which I have endeavored to maintain, are also known. If these principles and these opinions, now not likely to be materially changed, should recommend me to further marks of public regard and confidence, I should not withhold myself from compliance with the general will. But I have no pretentions of my own to bring forward, and trust that no friends of mine would at any time use my name for the purpose of preventing harmony among those whose general political opinions concur, or for any cause whatever, but a conscientious regard to the good of the country.

It is obvious, gentlemen, that at the present moment tendency of opinions among those to be represented in the Convention is generally and strongly set in another direction. I think it my duty, therefore, under existing circumstances, to request those, who may feel a preference, for me not to indulge in that preference, nor oppose any obstacle to the leading wishes of political friends, or to united & cordial efforts for the accomplishment of those wishes.

The election of the next autumn must involve, in general, the same principles, and the same questions, as belonged to that of 1840 The cause, I conceive, to be the true cause of the country, its permanent prosperity, and all its great interests; the cause of its peace, and its honor; the cause of good government true liberty, and the preservation and integrity of the constitution, and none should despair of its success

I am, gentlemen,
with sentiments of sincere regard,
your obliged & obedient servant,
DANIEL WEBSTER.

To Messrs. JOHN HAVEN, JOHN P. LYMAN, and others

THE TRUE REMEDY.—It is allowed by the most eminent physicians, both ancient and modern, that to eradicate disease from the human system, the most judicious and beneficial medicines should be administered. Many there are, who are constantly complaining of nausea, headache, weakness of limbs, and a debility of frame, and who have resorted to various highly extolled specifics in the sanguine expectation of a thorough cure. But they have been doomed to disappointment, and the whole was owing to an ignorance of the cure that led to so general a prostration of the system. Medical men are agreed in one point; that the whole cause of disease is the too rapid & abundant secretion of bile, and that unless the most proper and correct means are taken to prevent, or remove any such undue secretion, the afflicted will soon find a grave.

Stainburn's Vegetable Extract Pills being a composition of the finest and purest parts of certain vegetables are sure to correct biliary secretions and exert an influence immediate and perfect in their effect. Stainburn and Clickner 338 Broadway, New York, the sole proprietors, having furnished their agents in this city and elsewhere with a quantity of this invaluable medicine, are deserving the highest gratitude from an afflicted community.

Price 25 cents per. box. Office 338 Broadway, N. Y. next door below the Tabernacle

Said pills are sold in Easton by the agent E. M. DAWSON & BROTHER, and by agents published in another part of our paper.

FARMERS'

FOUNDRY.

THE SUBSCRIBERS grateful for the patronage heretofore received, begs leave respectfully to inform their friends and the public generally, that they now have on hand & are daily manufacturing the most approved ever offered to the public on this Shore. Their superiority over other machines consists in simplicity and strength, which will enable us to warrant them with perfect safety Notwithstanding there are numerous Machines used in this county it is a well known fact that they are too liable to become injured and broken from trivial causes, arising from their complicated construction The Machines we now offer to the public have been tested by a number of experienced Farmers both on the Western and Eastern Shore, and have invariably given general satisfaction

They would also call the attention of the public to their extensive assortment of,

PLOUGHS,

Plough Castings,— Mill Castings, &c. &c.

Their assortment of Ploughs embraces a great variety, viz:

WINAN's Self Sharpner	BEACH Improved ...
DAVIS	BERNARD .....
SINCLAIR & MOOR	WILEY .....
CROWITH	PATENT CYCLOIDAL
BEACH	Plough &c .....

The merits of most of the above Ploughs are already well known; but the Wiley and Patent Cycloidal have been recently introduced by us on this Shore, as a valuable acquisition to the Farmer The Patent Cycloidal, in 1842 took the first premium at the agricultural Exhibition, near Govanstown, Baltimore county, Md. over numerous competitors, composing some of the most celebrated Ploughs of Pennsylvania, New York and Maryland. All our Ploughs are stocked of the best timber, and warranted to run well. We are also prepared to do

WROUGHT WORK

of every description at the shortest notice, and at City prices. We respectfully solicit the patronage of the public and invite them to an examination of our stock

HUSSEY & HOPKINS.

N. B.—Persons having machines to repair will please bring them in as early in the spring as possible, so as to give full time to do the work in proper manner. H & H.
