MRS. CAUDLE'S CURTAIN LECTURES—No. 3.

Mrs. Caudle has just returned unexpectedly from the Springs.—She suspects that during her absence Caudle has joined the Anacreontic Society, to which his friend Prettyman belongs; she entertains several other suspicions consequent thereupon.

So, Mr. Caudle, my parlour is to be turned into a drinking and smoking room for gentlemen of the—What-you-call-it-Society, you have got inducted into in my absence. You didn't think I was coming home so soon? No, Caudle, you didn't know the feelings of a woman that's been the wife I've been to you. No doubt I came home too soon for you and your pot-companions—no doubt, Caudle, you'd all be glad I'd never come home. But I might have known there was something a brewing when you consented so easily to my going to the sea side, Caudle; and when you almost broke my heart with your disregard for my health and comfort in the steamboat that carried me away from the delights of home; and when you were in such a hurry to return yourself, and leave me and your poor children alone, I may say, on the shore, on pretence that you must attend to business.—Business indeed!—Oh, Caudle; now I see the business that drove you home so suddenly—Business! To make a tavern of your house, a wandering minstrel of yourself, and to disgrace your innocent wife and children. Did your friend Prettyman pay your initiation fee, Caudle? Oh, Caudle, how can you continue these wicked courses? But what could I expect when your hopeful company broke my China mug and abused my blessed aunt's picture when I was out only one evening—you thought of course you'd have a jubilee when I was to be gone so long. What! I needn't make such a fuss about your having a few friends in the house? No, Caudle, I never object to innocent enjoyments, but I wont have a musical club room made of my parlour, Caudle—and I wont have my whole house pollated with tobacco smoke and brandy. Don't tell me, Caudle—I know better—doesn't every thing in the house smell of your filthy cigar smoke? and didn't I see the lemon peel in the very street before my door? Oh, Caudle, your aggravating conduct has nearly driven me mad, but I haven't quite lost my senses yet. I can see, and I can smell, Caudle. What! There was no lemon peel before my door, and if there was, that don't prove that my parlour was turned into a drinking-room? Oh, Caudle! Caudle!—light the candle this minute, Caudle, till I see whether you have the shame left to bring a blush into your face; but no—I suppose you have learned to master even your sense of shame, when your poor nobody of a wife is concerned. Oh, no, Caudle, I know better than that—fiddling and fluting and singing don't go alone, Caudle—they are too dry—there must be brandy and water, and cigars into the bargain. Caudle, and without regard to decency or expense, Caudle. What do I call you Caudle so often for? I suppose a woman has a right to call the man that ought to be her husband, by his name. You wish I had never had such a right? Caudle I'll get out of bed this minute—if there was a light in the room I'd go into hysterics. Oh, Caudle! if I wasn't an uncommon patient woman, and if I had not some respect for my children, Caudle, you'd have been exposed to the world long ago, Caudle! But while Miss Prettyman's in the way, its no wonder you should wish I never had the right to call you by your name, Caudle—for I will call you Caudle, if it was only to show that I once had the right. I suppose it was to improve your voice to please Miss Prettyman, that you joined your new pot companions—and no doubt you went out every moonlight night to serenade Miss Prettyman. I know how these things end Caudle—you could not be with a parcel of young unmarried men, Caudle, without joining in all their frolics—you're such a fool, Caudle—I know you, Caudle, better than you know yourself.—You didn't join any society, and I know you never could sing? Oh, Caudle, what a simpleton I was to think you would be lonely without your lawful wife—lonely! not you—as long as you had your musical comrades, and your brandy, and your cigars, and Miss Prettyman to serenade. Did she open her window, Caudle? Did she look out at you, Caudle? What did you sing to her, Caudle. "The Young May Moon?" That's what you used to try to sing under my window before I was unfortunate enough to become your slave, Caudle. "You didn't sing any?" No, Caudle, I hope not. I hope you have enough of feeling left at least not to profane that song. Why do I torment myself with unfounded suspicions about your serenading when I know it isn't true? Oh, Caudle! I knew you were a cruel hard hearted man, but I was ignorant till now, Caudle, that you were a deceiver. How many more married men with a wife and four or five children each, were in your serenading party, Caudle? Did they take their wives along, Caudle? You tell me again you didn't join any society, and you didn't go a serenading? Well, Caudle, its all very well—I must submit patiently to your misconduct, and worse than that, to your deceitful doings—but, Caudle, I must tell you my mind, not that I hope to reform you, but only to satisfy my own conscience—you should hear a little quiet advice from your lawful wife—now dont kick the quilt off the bed, Caudle—it's but reasonable. What—I know it's all a lie? Well, only let me see Miss Prettyman, or her pretty brother near this house—if I dont—Here Mr. Caudle having closed his ears with the blanket, avers that the humming noise which was kept up put him asleep; but he expects—poor man—a continuation of the same subject the next opportunity.

Scraps FOR THE EASTON GAZETTE.

Omne tulit punctum, qui miscuit utile dulci
Hor.

It is a remarkable coincidence in the fate of some of the princes who have sat on the throne of England, that all those who have espoused princesses of France, have not only become unpopular with their subjects, but have come to an untimely end. For example—Edward II. married to Isabel, daughter of Philip IV. of France, murdered in Berkeley Castle; Richard II. married to Isabel, daughter of Charles VI. of France, murdered in Ponterpact Castle: Henry VI. married to Margaret, daughter of Rene, duke of Anjou, murdered by Richard III.: Charles I. married to Henrietta Maria, daughter of Henry IV. of France, died on the Scaffold.

BELLS.—It is said that Paulinus, Bishop of Nola, a city of Campania in Italy, introduced bells into the church about A. D. 400, to summon the people to divine worship; but it does not appear that large bells were used before the sixth century. In Britain they were applied to church purposes before the conclusion of the seventh century. About the beginning of the following century bells were first baptized.

The Colossus of Rhodes was a statue of brass erected to the SUN, at the mouth of the harbour of Rhodes in the island of the same name, in the Mediterranean Sea. It was 105 feet high, and the ships of that period are said to have passed between its legs. It was finished B. C. 288, after twelve years' labor. Sixty-six years subsequent to its erection, it was overthrown by an earthquake, and lay neglected till A. D 672, when Moarvias the Sixth, Caliph of the Saracens, having taken Rhodes, sold the brass of this famous statue to a Jewish merchant, who loaded 900 camels with it. Allowing only 800 lbs. weight to each camel, the Colossus must have weighed upwards of 320 tons.

PEDESTRIAN EXPEDITION.—Euchidas, a citizen of Platea, travelled on foot from that city to Delphi to obtain the sacred fire. Having effected this, he returned to Platea the same day, before sun-set, having walked a distance of 125 English miles. No sooner had he saluted his fellow-citizens and delivered the fire, than he fell at their feet and expired

CARDS.—It is generally supposed that cards were invented in France about the year 1390, to amuse Charles VI. during the intervals of a melancholy disorder which at length brought him to his grave. Some, however, contend for their being of Spanish origin, while others refer them to the Romans. "The odious fashion of card-playing," says Dr. Johnson, "was produced by a conspiracy of the old, the ugly, and the ignorant, against the young and beautiful, the witty and the gay; as a contrivance to level all distinctions of nature and of art; to confound the world in a chaos of folly; to take from those who could outshine them, all the advantages of mind and body, to withhold youth from its natural pleasures, to deprive wit of its influence, and beauty of its charms; to sink life into a tedious uniformity, and to allow it no other hopes or fears than those of robbing and being robbed."

PENS.—Goose-quill pens are supposed to have been in use among us between four and five hundred years. Allatius, keeper of the Vatican Library, who died at Rome in 1669, had a very extraordinary pen with which, and no other, he wrote Greek for forty years; and having lost it, he was so grieved that he could scarcely refrain from tears. It is not said of what the pen was made.

Philemon Holland, a physician of Coventry, translated Pliny's Natural History into English with one pen, as he himself says in these lines:

With one sole pen I wrote this book,
Made of a grey-goose quill;
A pen it was when I it took,
A pen I leave it still.

Many persons who daily use the dollar-mark ($) may probably be ignorant, that it is an abbreviation of the letters U. S., and is therefore peculiar to Federal money.

The term "broach," sometimes written 'brooch,' seems to be derived from the name of the City of Broach, about fourteen miles distant from the mines of agates in the principality of Rajpepla, in the province of Gujrat. The agates obtained in these mines are cut into beads, crosses, snuff-boxes, and other ornaments, in the City of Broach, and exported thence to other parts of India and elsewhere.

DEATH WARRANT OF CHRIST.

The Courier des Etats Unis, of a late date says: "Chance has put into our hands the most imposing and interesting judicial document, to all christians, that has ever been recorded in human annals; that is the identical death warrant of our Lord Jesus Christ. We transcribe the document from a copy of the translation.

SENTENCE.

Rendered by Pontius Pilate, Acting Governor of Lower Galilee, that Jesus of Nazareth shall suffer death on the Cross.

In the year seventeen of Tiberius Cæser, and the 25 day of March the city of Holy Jerusalem; Annas and Caiaphas being priests, sacrificators of the people of God; Pontius Pilate Governor of lower Galilee, sitting on the Presidential chair of the plætory, condemns Jesus of Nazareth to die on the cross between two thieves—the great & notorious evidence of the people, saying—

1. He is a seducer.
2. He is seditious.
3. He is an enemy of the law.
4. He calls himself, falsely, the Son of God.
5. He entered into the temple followed by a multitude bearing palm branches in their hands.

Order the first centurion, Quintus Cornelius, to lead him to the place of execution.

Forbid any person whomsoever either poor or rich to oppose the death of Jesus.

The witnesses that signed the death of Jesus, are—

1st. Daniel Robani, a Pharisee.
2d. Joannus Horobable.
3d. Rhaphdel Rabadi.
4th. Capet, a citizen.

Jesus shall go out of the city by the gate 'Strenuous.'

The above sentences are engraved on a copper plate; on one side is written these words: "A similar plate is sent to each of the tribes."

It was found in an antique vase of white marble, while excavating in the city Aquilla, in the Kingdom of Naples, in the year 1835, and was discovered by the Commissariat of Arts, attached to the French Armies. At the expedition of Naples it was found enclosed in a box of ebony, in the sacristy of Cuartem. The French translation was made by the members of the commission of Arts. The children requested earnestly that the plate might not be taken away from them. The request was granted as a reward of the army.—M. Dennon, one of the savans, caused a plate to be made of the model, on which he had engraved the above sentence—at the sale of his collection of curiosities, it was bought by Lord Howard, for five thousand eight hundred and eighty francs.

$50 REWARD.

Ranaway from the subscriber on Tuesday the 21st inst., negro girl MARY JANE calling herself MARY JANE ADAMS. Said negro is 20 years old, a dark mulatto, about five feet one or two inches high, thick set, and well formed, a very bushy head, thick lips, the under lip protruding, rather likely, and pleasant when spoken to.

She took with her a variety of clothing, among which a large black and white blanket shawl. 'Tis very likely she may have gone to Baltimore in the Steam-boat Ozaris, the morning she left from St. Michaels, as she has acquaintances in Baltimore, who no doubt would aid her escape.

I will give twenty five dollars for her if taken in this county and lodged in the jail at Easton, or fifty dollars if taken out of the county, and secured so that I get her.
