It appears that the fire stopped at John Hildreth's brick building at one point, and a lane at another point. The buildings destroyed are estimated to be worth about one hundred thousand dollars, and if the good therein were not saved, the total destruction of property will not be much short of a million.

MEXICO.—The Washington Correspondent of the N. Y. Journal of Commerce writes:

The despatches brought by M. Perrott from Mexico, which reached here on Saturday, are very important. I was not mistaken as to their purport.—Propositions are offered, indirectly, but substantially from the Mexican Government to settle all outstanding claims and difficulties between the two governments.

As far as can be unofficially learned, the Mexican Government propose, 1st, the withdrawal of the United States naval force from Vera Cruz, and the Mexican coast; 2d, upon the compliance of the United States with this request, diplomatic relations to be restored, and diplomatic agents to be mutually appointed; 3d, negotiations to be entered into for the settlement and liquidation of all difficulties between Mexico and the U. States; 4th, a proper boundary line to be agreed upon between the United States and Mexico; 5th, a proper and reasonable remuneration to be allowed to Mexico for the adjustment of the new boundary.

SMALL POX. A letter, dated Baltimore, Nov. 15, 6 P. M., to the editor of the North American, Philadelphia, says:

"It is a fact, better perhaps to be told than kept in secrecy, that the small pox is raging in this city, to a very considerable extent. A good many deaths have occurred from the effects of that most fearful disease. Those who had been vaccinated have become its victims. Our city otherwise is considered healthy.

The circulation of reports like the above is calculated to do injury to the city of Baltimore, if uncontradicted. It is known that cases of small pox have occurred in most of our cities; but we were yesterday informed by a highly respectable physician of this city, that there is an unnecessary alarm in regard to the prevalence of that disease in Baltimore; the number of cases being greatly exaggerated. We hope that there will be an official publication on the subject, so as to leave no room for the city to be injured by the misapprehension or misrepresentation of letter writers. But be the number of cases ever so few, vaccination should be resorted to by all as a measure of precaution. Cases of varioloid have been mistaken for, and represented as, small pox.—Inq. Rep.

THE ARREST OF OLE BULL.—We have from a good authority the following statement of the circumstances which led to the arrest of this distinguished Musician, in Baltimore a day or two ago, and we give place to it that a correct knowledge of the facts may be obtained:

The Arrest of Ole Bull in Baltimore.—The circumstances attending the recent arrest of Ole Bull in Baltimore are these:

A contract was made by an agent of Ole Bull, with Mr. Wm. E. Burton of this city, for Ole Bull to play four nights at the Arch Street Theatre. Mr. Burton agreed upon his part to furnish a full and competent orchestra to accompany Ole Bull.

Ole Bull came to this city from Boston to fulfil the engagement, bringing with him Sig La Manna to conduct the orchestra. Upon his arrival Mr. Burton he found could not procure the orchestra, (they being otherwise engaged) and wished him to play with a piano accompaniment, which he refused to do. He thereby was at considerable expense in coming to this city, fully prepared to fulfil the contract. Thus the matter stood for more than a year, until a few days ago, in Baltimore, Mr. Burton had him arrested just as he was about leaving his hotel for the purpose of performing at his Concert.—Phila. U. S. Gaz.

THE HON. J. M. BERRIEN.—With the sense of a real and severe loss to the National Councils, we collect from the Georgia papers the resignation by Mr. BERRIEN of the unexpired portion of his present Senatorial term.

He is to be replaced, no doubt, by a Whig worthy to be his successor, and capable of conferring honor on his State; but the late Senator possessed some peculiar merits that we may well consider not easily again to be supplied to the body, since in them we have seen him, for a series of years, without a rival there. As the chief of the Judiciary Committee, we have been accustomed constantly to see him, whether from his general ability in legislation as a science, or from a severe preparation on every question that came into his hands, able always to contend, single handed, against any odds, and often to prove himself, on that his own particular sort of subject, a match, if necessary, for the entire Senate.

The loss, then, of such very high ability in every thing that belongs to systematic legislation, to scientific jurisprudence, is very great. Nor, indeed, has Mr. BERRIEN less continually merited and commanded the esteem of his colleagues, by the admirable example of a truly Senatorian demeanor which he has afforded, in the midst of times which daily tempt men more and more to the abandonment of every thing that in the outward forms of public life graces it, as the visible image of all that it should be within. No man has ever better preserved than Mr. B. all the amenities and courtesies of debate; no man incapable of violating the forms was ever more observant of the substance of what is right and becoming. Always as moderate and measured as he was able and earnest, we have never heard or seen of his ceasing for one instant to be a Senator whose public and whose personal conduct were admirable models.—Nat Int.

The Puseyite rupture with the Anglican church has taken an important turn. Mr. Newman and a batch of his friends have at length formally seceded, and joined the Church of Rome. The event has not excited much surprise, for it has been long expected. Whether the church from which they have seceded will now experience peace in her bosom, rent and torn as she has been so long by jars and discord, is by no means certain. The Puseyite, or rather Newmanite, feeling, is not confined to Oxford—the sister university is more or less tainted with it. No doubt can exist that the seceders are deep thinking, conscientious men—men of learning and thought and abstraction; and however much the world may deplore their conduct, they have every thing to lose and nothing to gain—we speak in a peculiar and worldly sense—by the transfer of their allegiance. Apostacy is, at all times, the result of deep, overwhelming conviction, or the rankest hypocrisy. But no man is a hypocrite without a motive. Self interest is usually the impelling one in such a case; but we look in vain for the existence of such a powerful instrument of propulsion in the cases before us—for Rome has nothing to offer her disciples in this country but poverty, and labour, and self-denial.

MRS. MOTT THE VOCALIST.—A letter writer in the Boston Post, says of this lady:

"Mrs. Valentine Mott is the wife of one of the sons of the celebrated Doctor Mott, the Sir Astley Cooper of American surgery and medicine. She is, I am told by one of the New York presses a native of Scotland, and remotely entitled to the female prerogatives of a peerage. She married Mr. Mott the younger in Europe, and some time since came to this country with her husband, and set up an establishment in Broadway. An income was settled upon the husband and wife, which however, did not meet the demands of their household. An advance was demanded, which was peremptorily denied; and the indignant appellants immediately resolved on throwing themselves upon their own resources—first with the view of establishing their own independence, and secondly, for the purpose of revenging themselves and spiting those who had refused to make the suitable allowance. Such is the substance of the story that gossip has circulated."

MRS. CAUDLE'S CURTAIN LECTURES.

Mrs. Caudle "has been told" that Caudle has "taken to play at billiards.

Oh, you're very late to night, dear. It's not late? Well, then, it isn't, that's all.—Of course, a woman can never tell when it's late. You were late on Tuesday, too: a little late on the Friday before; on the Wednesday before that—now, you needn't twist about in that manner. I'm not going to say anything—no; for I see it's no use. Once, I own it used to fret me when you staid out; but that's all over: you've now brought me to that state, Caudle—and it's your own fault, entirely—that I don't care whether you ever come home or not. I never thought I could be brought to think so little of you; but you've done it: you've been treading on the worm for these twenty years, and it's turned at last.

"Now, I'm not going to quarrel; that's all over: I don't, feel enough for you to quarrel with,—I don't, Caudle, as true as I'm in this bed. All I want of you is—any other man would speak to his wife, and not lie, there like a log—all I want is this. Just tell me where you were on Tuesday?—You were not at dear mother's, though you know she's not well, and you know she thinks of leaving the dear children her money; but you never had any feeling for anybody belonging to me. And you were not at your Club: no, I know that. And you were not at any theatre. How do I know? Ha, Mr. Caudle! I only wish I didn't know. No; you were not at any of these places; but I know well enough where you were. Then why do I ask, if I know? That's it; just to prove what a hypocrite you are: just to show you that you can't deceive me.

"So, Mr. Caudle—you've turned billiard player, sir. Only once. That's quite enough: you might as well play a thousand times, for you're a lost man, Caudle. Only once, indeed. I wonder, if I was to say 'Only once,' what would you say to me? But, of course, a man can do no wrong in anything.

"And you're a lord of the creation, Mr. Caudle; and you can stay away from the comforts of your blessed fireside, and the society of your own wife and children—though, to be sure, you never thought anything of them—to push ivory balls about with a long stick upon a green table-cloth. What pleasure any man can take in such stuff must astonish any sensible woman. I pity you, Caudle!

"And you can go & do nothing but make cannons; for that's the gibberish they talk at billiards—when there's the manly and athletic game of cribbage, as my poor grandmother used to call it, at your own hearth. You can go into a billiard room, you respectable tradesman, or as you set yourself up for one, for if the world knew all, there's very little respectability in you—you can go and play billiards with a set of creatures in mustachios, when you might take a nice, quiet hand with me at home.—But no! anything but cribbage with your own wife?

"Caudle, it's all over now; you've gone to destruction. I never knew a man enter a billiard-room that he wasn't lost forever. There was my uncle Wardle; a better man never broke the bread of life: he took to billiards, and he didn't live with aunt a month afterwards. A lucky fellow! And that's what you call a man who leaves his wife—a lucky fellow? But to be sure, what can I expect? We shall not be together long, now: it's been some time coming, but, at last, we must separate; and the wife I've been to you!

"But I know who it is; it's that fiend, Prettyman. I will call him a fiend, and I'm by no means a foolish woman, you'd no more have thought of billiards than a goose, if it, hadn't been for him. Now, it's no use, Caudle, your telling me that you've only been once, and that you can't hit a ball anyhow—you'll soon get over all that; and then you'll never be at home.

You'll be a marked man, Caudle; yes, marked: there'll be something about you that'll be dreadful; for if I couldn't tell a billiard player by his looks, I've no eyes that's all. They all of 'em look as yellow as parchment, and wear mustachios—I suppose you'll let yours grow, now; though they'll be a good deal troubled to come, I know that. Yes, they've all a yellow and sly look; just for all as if they were first cousins to people that pick pockets. And that will be your case, Caudle: in six months, the dear children won't know their own father.

"Well, if I know myself at all, I could have borne any thing but billiards. The companions you'll find! The Captains that will be always borrowing fifty pounds of you! I tell you, Caudle, a billiard-room's a place where ruin of all sorts is made easy I may say to the lowest understanding—so you can't miss it. It's a chapel of ease for the devil to preach in—don't tell me not to be eloquent: I dont know what you mean, Mr. Caudle, and I shall be just as eloquent as I like. But I never can open my lips—and it isn't often, goodness knows!—that I'm not insulted.

No, I won't be quiet on this matter; I won't, Caudle: on any other, I would'nt say a word—and you know it—if you didn't like it; but on this matter, I will speak.—I know you can't play at billiards; and never could learn—I dare say not; but that makes it all the worse, for look at the money you'll lose; see the ruin you'll be brought to. It's no use your telling me you'll not play—now you can't help it.—And nicely you'll be eaten up. Don't talk to me; dear aunt told me all about it The lots of fellows that go every day into billiard-rooms to get their dinners, just as a fox sneaks into a farm-yard to look about him for a fat goose—and they'll eat you up, Caudle; I know they will.

"Billiard-balls, indeed! Well, in my time, I've been over Woolwich Arsenal—you were something like a man, then, for it was just before we were married—and then, I saw all sorts of balls; mountains of 'em, to be shot away at churches, and into people's peaceable habitations, breaking the china, and nobody knows what—I say, I've seen all these balls—well, I know I've said that before; but I choose to say it again—and there's not one of 'em, iron as they are, that could do half the mischief of a billiard-ball. That's a ball, Caudle, that's gone clean through many a wife's heart, to say nothing of her children. And that's a ball, that night and day you'll be destroying your family with.—Don't tell me you'll not play! When a man's once given to it—as my poor aunt used to say—the devil's always tempting him with a ball, as he tempted Eve with an apple.

"I shall never think of being happy any more. No: that's quite out of the question. You'll be there every night—I know you will, better than you, so don't deny it—every night over that wicked green cloth. Green, indeed! It's red, Caudle, if you could properly see it—crimson red, with the hearts those balls have broken.—Don't tell me not to be pathetic—I shall: as pathetic as it suits me. I suppose I may speak, However, I've done. It's all settled now. You're a billiard-player, and I'm a wretched woman." "I did not deny either position," writes Caudle, "and for this reason—I wanted to sleep."

A gentleman writing to us from the Eastern Shore, says the Balt. American of 11th, on the subject of the establishment here of a house for the sale of French goods on an extensive scale, expresses his approbation of the plan proposed, and remarks:—

We do not care as country merchants how you establish it, so you do it. I am truly sorry to say that three-fourths of the best trade from this Shore have to go on to Philadelphia to purchase their fine goods on account of Baltimore deficiencies in French goods. I saw a few days ago a dozen of Dry Good boxes marked for Centreville, Eastern Shore of Md., on this very account. We would greatly prefer purchasing in Baltimore. It is more convenient, and at less expense to get our goods—for we are compelled to have them brought to Baltimore and then shipped over to us at double expense. You may publish the above in your valuable paper if you think it will further the object. I do not write this from my own conviction merely, but I assure you it is the conviction of every country merchant on this Shore.
