THE HIBERNIA.—The New York Commercial has been favored with the following letter from a passenger on board the Hibernia, dated

ST. JOHNS, NEWFOUNDLAND, Nov. 6, 1845.

By the merciful interposition of a kind Providence I am permitted to write you again, a mercy I did not dare to hope for this forenoon. But to satisfy you at once, I will begin by saying that I am safe and well. I will give you in as few words as possible the account of our trip to this out of the way place.

I wrote to you last from Halifax on Monday, 3d inst. We left there that day at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, and had cloudy weather, but on the whole had a fine time. We ran at the rate of about 200 miles a day till yesterday at one p. m. when our captain, (supposing we had passed Cape Race) turned the ship's head three points more Northerly—a fatal mistake, for we had thick foggy weather, so thick we could not see the bow of the ship from the funnel. All went on well till 7 at night (last night,) when we were alarmed by the cry of "Port your helm—Stop her—Back her full speed—Ice, rocks," &c. &c.

I ran out of the saloon, and to my horror saw right above me, higher than the ship's mast, three times multiplied, a dark something which I thought was ice, but was soon convinced to the contrary by the ship's striking twice, once lightly and next time more severely. Our captain behaved with the utmost coolness, giving his orders with perfect self-possession, and though it was so foggy, as I have described, and we were going at the rate of 11 miles an hour, they stopped and backed the ship in twice her length.

Had she struck a quarter of a minute sooner we must all have gone to the bottom at once. You cannot conceive the horror of the time—the dark night—the uncertainty of what it was and where we were, and the dark overhanging rock, altogether made up a scene which one does not wish to see twice in a lifetime. We had the engines backed, put the helm hard down and ran her backward till the rock disappeared; and then we had the same scene over again, for we came quite as near running on the same place stern foremost; then the noise and tumult again rose high, and the same sounds and orders were repeated. After an intense anxiety of three minutes the engines got her stopped from her sternway, and she went ahead again. Then came the anxious question—"Where are we and what damage have we received?" The Captain soon had to confess it was Cape Race we had run on, and he had made a mistake of twenty-five miles.

Then as to the damage; the pumps were sounded; although the captain said at first "it was all right," I knew from his anxious face that something worse than he dared to tell had happened. It was soon generally known that we were leaking badly, 9 inches an hour, and it required all hands at the pumps to keep her free; this, too, at night, in a thick fog, was precarious enough. All hands were set to work, some to pump, others to fix a sail to draw under her to be sucked in and stop the leak, it was ready at about day light this morning and tried on, but was of no use; the leak gained and at 7 this morning the captain concluded to make for the nearest port; but how to reach it was the question, for the fog continued and we could not see a ship's length.

We had been running all the night (after we struck) due South, so as to get away from the land.—We turned back at 7, as before mentioned, an anxious day we had of it, I can assure you. We ran due north again, and after numerous stops and firing cannon repeatedly, we had the satisfaction to see two boats rowing toward us in the fog. Gladder men than our crew and captain I never saw; he was frantic with haste for the men to row to us, and when he got hold of one he tore his clothes in his haste to pull him on board. They proved to be New Foundland fishermen, and said they new the course to steer for St. Johns, then distant, they said, 30 miles. We ran on with them on board, the fog still continuing, and then they seemed bewildered.

Guns were fired again, which were heard from this place, and boats put off to us, which piloted us in.—We got into harbor at dusk and just in time, for while I am writing this letter, they are busy getting our ship on the mud to prevent her from sinking. Now as to our means of getting away from here; having only just arrived, we have no fixed plan. The captain talks of sending an overland express to Halifax for the steamer Margaret to come on and take us on our journey, or if there is time for the express to get there, to have the Caledonia come round for us, but all is uncertain yet. It may be the Hibernia can be repaired; if so it will be done here and we shall proceed on our voyage.

OREGON.—The London Times of the 30th ult. has a long leading editorial on the forthcoming President's Message. Seldom, it says, has a document of that character had "more momentous topics to deal with, more important doubts te remove, more hidden things to reveal." It expresses its belief that nothing is to be hoped from arbitration, but says that "The actual value of the country is not so great but that terms might be easily hit upon and honorably accepted under the sanction of a third Power. The question, therefore, seems to be narrowed to the alternative of arbitration or eventual war; and the reluctance of Americans to sumbit their claims to arbitration implies a want of confidence in their validity, which certainly does not surprise us, since we are tormented by no such doubts of our own rights; and England is perfectly willing to abide by the impartial judgment of the world."

It proceeds to say that President Polk is under the necessity of consulting the demands of his party, rather than those of jusstice, and adds:—

But, in spite of the folly and violence of many of the sections of this party, it must be acknowledged by the most desperate amongst them that the possibility of a maritime war is not to be lightly dealt with; that the ostensible objects of such a war are contemptible and disgraceful; and that the effects of a state of war, whatever its termination might be, would be equally injurious to the interests and the liberties of the commonwealth. The populace will always shout at the beginning of a war, and at the end of one; but to carry on hostilities is to endure privations, to impose burdens, to encourage reverses, to moderate successes, and to apply the resources of the country with a most resolute head and an unbending arm; and we doubt whether an American Government, as at present constituted, could stand at all under the tremendous pressue of the unpopularity arising out of those sacrifices and accidents to which all States may in war be exposed. The Government of a President of the United States is therefore in reality more heavily pledged than that of any other State to resist the passions of the people, which would infallibly turn round upon its own rulers whenever it began to feel the consequences of their imprudence; and the real interests of the nation, as well as the fixed principles of public duty, will at least not be sacrificed with impunity.

Should arbitration be rejected, the Times says it matters little whether the abrogation of the existing arrangement for the joint occupation of the territory proceeds from Great Britain or from a party in the United States.

Under existing circumstances, since emigration has been going on to a considerable extent west of the Rocky Mountains and the new settlers there carry out all the angry feelings which threaten to embroil their respective countries, the system of joint occupancy is a mere blind for aggression, and, instead of being an admission of a concurrent right, it is a practical denial of one. The position of the Hudson's Bay Company is one of occupation and defence; and unless a line of provisional demarcation can be agreed upon, it is scarcely possible that a collision should be long averted.

PROSPECTUS.

LEGISLATIVE REPUBLICAN.

It is our purpose to resume this winter, the issue of the "LEGISLATIVE REPUBLICAN." From the even balance of power in the House, from the talent, on both sides, of which it is composed; and from the many important matters which will be brought to their consideration, the approaching session will be peculiarly interesting and exciting, and the Proceedings of the Legislature,—and particularly the views of its different Members expressed upon the floor, will doubtless be eagerly sought after by the people of the several counties. With a view to gratify this demand of the public, and to give our readers a full account of the Proceedings of the Legislature, and sketches of the Debates arising upon every Question of any importance, we propose issuing a semi-weekly.—This system which has been pursued by us alone for some winters past, and at considerable expense, has found favor with the public, and will, we hope procure for us a large extra subscription for the winter's issue. The Reports of Debates, as heretofore published by us, have never yet given ground of complaint for unfairness, or partiality; on the contrary, their faithfulness has elicited thanks and gratulation from nearly every speaker, even of the party to which our Editorial columns are opposed. We design to continue to give full, fair and impartial sketches of the discussions as they occur,—uninfluenced by any view or opinion of our own on the subject of Debate, and giving preference to the speakers of no party.

With this pledge to the general public, and the low price at which the paper will be issued, it is hoped that the "Legislative Republican," will find its way to every corner of the State.

The price of the "Legislative Republican," to be issued every Wednesday and Saturday, during the approaching session of the Legislature, will be $1.50, paid in advance. RILEY & DAVIS.

Annapolis, Nov. 29, 1845.

☞Publishers of papers througout the State, who will give this Prospectus an insertion (with this note annexed) and send one of their papers with this Prospectus marked therein, shall receive the "Legislative Republican," in exchange. An Editorial Notice will also oblige us.
