THE STRANGER MAIDEN.

(A literal translation from Schiller.)

Deep in a shepherds' lowly vale,
What time in each returning year
The earliest larks the spring-time hail,
A beauteous maid would still appear.

Not in the vale was born the maid;
Unknown it was from whence she came:
Nor long the lovely stranger staid,
Nor left behind or trace or name.

Though all, her yearly presence blest,
Though many a sigh bewailed her flight,
With lofty mien the maid repress
Too near approach or word too light.

Bright flow'rs and blushing fruits she brought,
But ripened 'neath another sun;
From other climes their bloom was caught,
In other soil their beauty won.

Her generous hand no bounty spared;
Her fruits, her flow'rs, for all were free;
To youth, to age, her gifts she shared,
'For none,' she said, 'shall slighted be.'

So, still appeared the stranger maid,
Unknown to all from whence she came;
Nor long the lovely vision staid,
Nor left behind or trace or name.

THE BLOSSOMS OF LIFE.

BY OTWAY CURRY.

Life is like a sweeping river,
Ceaseless in its seaward flow—
On whose waves quick sunbeams quiver:
On whose banks quick blossoms grow—

Blossoms quick to grow, and perish;
Swift to bloom, and swift to fall:
Those we earliest learn to cherish
Soonest pass beyond recall.

Shall we loose them all forever?
Leave them on this earthly strand?
Shall their joyous radience never
Reach us in the spirit's land?

Soon the tide of life, upflowing
Buoyantly from time's dim shore,
Where supernal flowers are growing
Shall meander evermore.

There the hopes that long have told us
Of the climes beyond the tomb,
While superber skies enfold us,
Shall renew their starry bloom.

And the bloom that here in sadness
Faded from the flowers of love,
Shall with its immortal gladness
Crown us in the world above.

A LAMENT.

(Poetical Remains of Mrs. Jane Gray.)

Weary, weary,
The night and day,
Weary, weary,
When thou art away.

I watch the stars
In the deep blue sky,
When the fleecy bars
Of the clouds go by.

I watch the rise
Of the late red moon,
And list to the sighs
Of the night winds tune.

Yet weary, weary
The night must be
Weary, weary
Away from thee.

I seek my bed,
And the tardy sleep
O'er my feverish head
And limbs doth creep;

And visions fill me
With joy and fright,
And fancies thrill me
With vague delight.

All unsubstantial
And mixed with fear,
I awake, they're over—
Thou art not near.

I start, and the dawn
Is bursting through,
The mists withdrawn
From the mountains blue.

The red streaks breaking
In joyful day,
The birds awaking
Their matin lay.

Yet weary, weary
The livelong day,
Weary, weary
When thou art away!

PICTURE OF A MEAN MAN. Dow, jr., of the Sunday Mercury, gives the following graphic picture of a mean man:

"My friends, too many of you, (city folks especially,) are over inclined to meanness. I know some who are so vastly little—if I may be allowed to use the term—that when they are brushed from earth into the devil's dust pan, the old chap will have to put on double magnifying spectacles and poke for a long while, among the rubbish of mortality, before he can find them. There is neighbor Tightfist, in some respects, a worthy member of my congregation, and yet, I regret to say, he is mean enough to chase a fat mosquito through a five mile swamp, for the sake of his suet. To his credit, however, he once made a sacrifice for the good cause by putting an unfortunate looking penny in the box, and going supperless to bed. And neighbor Stick-in-the-mud, too, if he had the power, and could enrich himself thereby, would brush the silver stars from the firmament, snatch the golden sun from the sky, and sell the moon for brass; and if six pence was required at the gate of heaven, rather than pay the fee, I verily beleive he would rise from his resting place at midnight, and pick the lock with a ten penny nail.
