No. 1.

PAINTINGS AND PAINTERS.

Here fabled chiefs, in darker ages born,
Or worthies old, whom arms or arts adorn,
Who cities rais'd, or tam'd a monstrous race,
The walls in venerable order grace;
Heroes in animated canvass frown,
And legislators seem to think in stone.
Pope's temple of Fame.

Some months ago we furnished a sketch of a studio in this town, the walls of which were embellished with a goodly number of familiar portraits. It is a pleasant thing to drop into the shaded room were the artist toils for bread. There is something inspiring in its silent and misty atmosphere. The easel and pallette—the light breaking through the half-shrouded window upon the unfinished canvass—the bent form of the pale and thought worn limner—the anxious brow—the dreaming eye, all serve to awaken in the mind recollections of the past; and remind us, alas! of the ill repaid toil of many who have struggled in this captivating department of art. We are in imagination floating from country to country and from age to age—in the antiquated studios of Rembrandt and Raphael—gazing with rapture upon the yet undeveloped nativity of the self-taught Correggio—beginning with Claude Lorraine mid the softened beauties of some never-to-be-forgotten landscape—making one of the fashionable coteries whose endless chat was the life of Sir Joshua's easel—or sitting at the side of our own Stuart while his eagle eye is searching the noble features of his most illustrious sitter. We love to muse of the old Painters—we love old paintings. We envy the artist, although the world has little regard for the nobleness of his calling—little sympathy for his self-sacrificing spirit. There are moments of conscious pride in his existence, which compensate for seasons of gloom, despondency and disappointment—he lives amid sublime visions of the past and future. The air he inhales is too rarefied—too etherial for ordinary mortals. He stands amid monuments of his own creation. In the solitude of his room he is never alone. Eloquent faces are greeting him from every quarter. His walls smile, frown and flash out shades of condition, which afford food for his speculative genius. Amid all he is the monarch. He alone utters a voice. He alone has thrown feature, form, passion into the canvass, and made it almost breathe with instinctive life.

The man whose breast is not susceptible of the influences which distil into the heart at the contemplation of a fine picture is brother to him "who has no music in his soul"—the sequitur follows. For one we would most unwillingly trust him with the settlement of an estate: or even with the loan of a few dollars from our purse. Would we might infuse into our community a taste for the beautiful, the innocent, the rational, the sublime teachings of the arts! They should form essential part of education; & every child should know something of an accomplishment which will scatter the ennui of many a weary moment, and soften the asperities of many an hour of affliction and bereavement.

We commenced this paper, dear reader, for the purpose of saying a word about a single artist and a single picture, but whither has our Pegasus borne us? We have travelled back into the past. We have lingered in the Vatican—strolled through the galleries of Florence and the Hague; & have at length returned to our little creek-bound village with a sentiment akin to quiet contentedness.

Who now of our readers young or old has not passed some moments in the old castle near ——— corner. It is still haunted, gentle reader, as formerly, but with far different apparitions. Fair ladies in full dress, venerable and good humored old men, merchants, lawyers and doctors, silently smiling upon each other, have taken the place of the spectral groups that danced through its lone halls for so long a season, and filled the nightly air with strange sounds. The spirits which now people its chambers and all under the potent sway of a mighty magician, whose presence awes them into impurturable repose. The artist Mr. Edwards—but no, we wont say a word about him. We have written of him before, although we confess, without doing justice to his merits. Since then the people have enjoyed the opportunity of testing his good qualities of head and heart, better than we can portray them. We shall leave what we think, therefore, unsaid, reserving to ourselves the privilege, however, should we survive him (which heaven forbid!) of inscribing upon his tomb the self-uttered destiny of the Augustine bard.

"Exegi monumentum ere perennius, Regalique situ Pyramidum altius;"

Among other pictures to be seen in the Clemcatine gallery is that of our old revolutionary relic Solomon Barrett. We have a strong liking for his old weather-beaten form and the stern grandeur of his composed features looking every inch a man. We even love that old snuff-colored coat, and we never see him at his own door or on the street but we feel ourselves in the presence of one of that small band who battled for the glorious inheritance of which we are now the possessors. We have sometimes almost fancied we saw the cloud of war rolling about his sturdy form, and caught glimpses, thro' its dark volumes, of the glorious flag of stars and stripes which is now floating from an hundred battlements, and greeting the breezes of every ocean and of every port under Heaven.—Old "uncle Solly" is one of the survivors. Where are those who bore arms with him in the season that tried men's souls? Like the leaves of the autumn, they have been scattered. Peace to their ashes! and peace to thee dear old man! God's benizon rest upon thee—quiet and happy be thy remaining days—and pure and strong and triumphant the hope that shall gild thy passage through the dark valley of death! Long, long will it be ere thou wilt cease to be remembered. When thy form shall no longer be seen on our streets—when that hand has tolled the bell for the last time—when the last tear has been shed upon thy grassy grave, we will still treasure thee in a green, fond and abiding memory. Our children will talk of thee by the hearth-stones of their homes; and those of us whose eyes have so often greeted thy honest form, will often in fancy see thee again and forget thou hast wandered from us forever.

But pardon this rambling, dear reader. A full heart makes an erratic pen. Seriously of this portrait. We believe it was painted at the suggestion of two or three of our citizens, who were desirous of having it purchased by the county, and retained, as a tribute of respect to a worthy townsman, and a means of keeping alive the recollection of an old soldier of the Revolution. The design is laudable. We understand that a paper containing a number of subscriber's names, is to be seen at the store of the Messrs. Dawson, in Easton.—Go, then and fill up that sheet with appropriate subscriptions. Let it be purchased, and suspended in some public place. Thus daily may we be reminded, by this graphic portrait of the old soldier; and thus may the rising generation derive from the contemplation of his honest toil-worn features, wholsome lessons of severe virtue, and honest exertion.

In conclusion, gentle reader, for we have already protracted this paper far beyond its intended limits, we would recommend thee to have thy picture taken, while the opportunity offers. It will not only aid the recollection of thy family and friends during thy absence, but continue thy memory after thou art dead. It is a valuable legacy to leave behind thee, which those who love thee will prize more than all else, and will not suffer easily to perish. Hereafter we shall talk of other things. We hope to greet thee often, and whether we weave thee a story, or indite thee a sonnet, or meditate for thee an essay, or take thee a hill and dale ramble like the present, we pray thee bear with an old man's garrulity, cease to scan what is written purely for thy amusement. These leaves are the offspring of stray moments which might readily be appropriated as fomerly (should thy fault-finding temper prove troublesome) to a glance through the newspaper, building castles in the air, or an after dinner nap in our comfortable old arm chair.

Bishop Whittingham's Charge.—We have been favored by Mr. H. Colburn, 206 Baltimore street, with a pamphlet copy of "A Charge delivered to the Clergy of the Diocese of Maryland, by William Rollinson Whittingham, Bishop of the Diocese, at the annual Convention in Baltimore, May 27, 1846,"

The Bishop has no very favorable opinion of the religious or moral improvement of the age; either with clergy or laity, and hence he urgently insists that ministers should be more diligent in the discharge of their parochial duties, prominent among which he properly places frequent private intercourse with their parishioners. He thinks that their time can be much more profitably spent in this way, than in discussing in their pulpits controversial points of doctrine.

The bishop has most truly, said, in this charge, that practices are now borne patiently, in public and private life, which our fathers would have branded as mean, dishonorable and disgraceful. Views are openly expressed, for the secret entertainment of which past generations would have esteemed a man a villian." This is true to the letter. Professed patriots pilfer with impunity, or sell their influence for place —and the grossest misconduct of clerical dignataries is palliated and defended. In these respects it is certain, that "the times are out of joint." If we cannot render politicians pure, we ought at least to insist, that those who aspire to direct us in the safe road to future happiness, shall keep themselves free from "all uncleanness," for a criminal minister does more injury to religion than can be inflicted by a dozen practical atheists.

It is the misfortune of the age, that there is more theoretical and less practical religion, than in former times. Churches are built and stated sermons are delivered —and yet wickedness increases. We concur with the bishop, that more should be done for the young. Religious instruction must be installed into the young and susceptible mind; if it be designed to make a lasting impression. But neglect in this particular is at least as much the fault of the parent as of the minister. Show is preferred to substance; and the young man or woman comes into society, in many cases, more fully impressed with his or her own importance, than with the necessity of living a religious or moral life. By the diligence of ministers in visiting & intructing the families of their parishoners, this evil may, probably, be measurably corrected.

We presume that the Bishop's Charge will be generally read by the members of the church in this State.—Clipper.

ANOTHER VOICE FROM MAINE!

Walddoboro,' Me., July 30, 1845.

Dear Sir:—Having experienced great benefit from your invaluable medicine, I feel it my duty and privilege to let the world know what it has done for me. Possessed of a strong constitution naturally, I had enjoyed perfect health previous to the spring of 1843, when I was troubled with a difficulty in my left side attended with considerable pain. Sometime in July I was violently attacked with a cough which continued until fall; then I was confined to the house eight months, during which time my cough was very severe. I frequently had spells of coughing which lasted two hours; daily raised large quantities of disagreeable matter, accompanied with blood. Sometimes I raised a quart of blood at a time. I consulted three physicians, all of whom did their best to restore me; gave me up; said they could do no more for me; I must die; it was impossible for me to live but a short time. One of them said my lungs were gone. At this critical moment when eminent physicians had exhausted their skill friends depaired of my life, my own hope of recovery at an end, I resorted to,

Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry.

When I had taken one and a half bottles those severe spells of coughing were removed. I continued taking the Balsam until Spring 1844, when I ceased to bleed at the lungs, my health and strength improved so that I left the house, but was not able to work for a year. Now my health is good. I am able to do a day's work every day on my farm

THAT SELLERS' VERMIFUGE is the Best in Use! Here is the proof.

LICKING STATION, Ky., Dec. 17th 1845.

Mr. R. E. Sellers:—I have the pleasure to inform you that I have used in my practice your celebrated Vermifuge with the most happy results. I have formerly used Fahnestock's but being persuaded to try yours, I have found it far superior in every respect, and can say without the fear of contradiction, that your Vermifuge possesses more virtue than any I ever used, and most cordially recommend it to the attention of the public. I will state a case where I gave one vial of your vermifuge: My brother's child was pining and wasting to a mere skeleton; in 30 hours after I gave the Vermifuge, the enormous quantity of upwards of six hundred worms were passed The child that was given up as lost, is now well and as hearty as any in the neighborhood. DIED, Departed this life in the town of Greensboro, on Saturday last, Famy, only daughter of W. B. & Anna Maria Massy, aged one year and eight months.

Like the flower that has been nipped in the bud by the wintry frost, has this little one been taken away—when at an age the most interesting in children, she has been taken away from her earthly parents. How inscrutable are the ways of Providence; in view of which fact we should at all times be willing to say, the Lord gave and the Lord has taken away, blessed is the name of the Lord."

Etrurian Wheat.

A SMALL quantity of the above wheat may be had for seeds, by any one wishing to sow it this fall, by application to Mr. Graham if immediately made.

It is highly recommended to the Farmers of the United States by the Editor of "American Farmer" (in volume 1. No. 12) who has became the agent for the sale of it at $2 per bushel. It is an early white wheat, with a smooth head, very strong vigorous growth, though not fly proof—where the grower of it this neighborhood, had supposed it most destroyed last fall, it recovered and produced nearly eight bushels to one. A sample may be seen at the Gazette Office.
