RANDOM REVERIES.

"From grave to gay—from lively to severe"

No. III.

"Love" says the sagacious La Fontaine "is the shadow of the morning, which decreases as the day advances." It has been compared to the flower or morning cloud—beautiful—but fleeting. Its words are like the music of birds—sweet, but unabiding—dying quickly away, to wake perchance on other ears, in other climes!

In continuation of the sentence quoted above, the author adds—"but friendship is the shadow of the evening, which lengthens with the setting sun of life." This two is a flower—but it is not the ephemeral of the garden. It lifts its violet head in the still valley, by the tinkling rill of the hills—modest, yet lovely. The wind sweeps over it but it is not broken. The storm beats upon it but it is not crushed. It folds not its petals in disguise, but spreads its face of smiles to the sunlight and the darkness—the zephyr and the tempest.

In this evanescent deceitful world we require something permanent and honest, that may not only give its smile where interest asks it, but stand by, and remain with us unchanged through all changes—a zest to joy, and to sorrow a consolation. Heaven grant thee, dear reader, this precious boon! Hast thou friends? cherish them in thy bosom. And when absence or death separate thee from the society of the truly loving and loved—thank Heaven that there is yet beyond the grave a communion undisturbed and eternal, by the throne of God, in a purer land!

There are few souls over which the creation of God sways not a deep and powerful influence. From the tender flower to the pride of the forest—from the gentlest zephyr to the resistless whirlwind—from the whispering rill to the ocean rolling its mighty waves in terrific roar against the eternal rocks—from the harmless vapor of the morning to the dark cloud bearing in its bosom the lightning of Heaven—from the smallest star to the largest orb which rolls its circuit in the blue vault of evening—from all above, beneath, and around us, beam upon the soul the beauty, benevolence, purity and grandeur of that Being, who laid the foundations of the Earth. If in this view such objects fail to divest our nature of its grosser principles, it is the fault of that heart which resists its pious teachings. The man who holds not communion with the creation around him, and imbibes not her hallowing influences, offers violence to nature itself.

"All natural objects have
An echo in the heart. This flesh doth thrill,
And has connexion by some unseen chain
With its original source and kindred substance,
The mighty forest, the proud tides of ocean,
Sky-clearing hills, and in the vast of air,
The starry constellations; and the sun
Parent of life exhaustless—these maintain
With the mysterious mind and breathing mould
A co-existence and community."

Reader, neglect not the voice of the beautiful world around thee. Should hate and revenge throw their baleful shadows over thy pathway, go out in that calm and holy hour when the full moon sheds its radiance in dreamy loveliness over our earth, and return to thy chamber with thoughts of love and compassion. Should sadness darken thy sky go forth into the still twilight season or linger amid the solitude of the stirless midnight and thou wilt find even melancholy, a soothing pleasure. Should the world disgust thee with its follies and vices—its strifes and its turmoil—its hollow-hearted professions; and its revelations of awful deceit penetrate the forests depths—find some spot where the solemn woods stretch far around thee,

"Solemn and silent every where—"

and there forget for a while thy mortal destiny and amid the pure, and holy and permanent about thee, be reminded of that land "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are forever at rest!"—

There is something impressively awful in the distant view of a large city at night. A spiritual something is gathering around its dark looming outlines, which we almost dread to approach—which we would stand aside and contemplate in silent awe. We have not before us the mere exhibitions of art. Association gives the spectacle a sublime animation which oppresses and overwhelms the spirit.

Faintly on the breeze comes the cry of the sentry—"Past one o'clock!"—and again silence drops her mantle over the city. How deserted are now the streets! We listen in vain for the hurrying feet upon the pavements, we look in vain for the beautiful, and gay, and active. Where is the crowd? Who can answer the question? The lover is dreaming of his idol; the girl of her lover. The warrior is winning his laurels by blood; the poet by ink; and the merchant in imagination filling his coffers with gold. But the eyes of all are not sealed. In some lonely chamber the silver cord, is about being loosed forever. The place of the father or the child will be vacant; the beds remain disturbed but unoccupied; the group gathers about the dying; the dead!

There under the garb of night steals with noiseless step over the stairs of some mansion the remorseless plunderer and assassin. The room is reached; the dagger is uplifted for the stroke; the flickering light from the hearth gleams upon its blade; the plunge—and a groan tells that the victim has passed from the image of death into eternity! Here on the sleepless pallet lies the child of anguish; she has counted the long hours in pain; despair glares at her side, and misery at her feet. She takes from her pillow the vial—drinks—and enters upon a dreamless repose!

Still more awful grows the city. Its walls and doors, its gardens and walks live and speak. They stand gloomy survivors of those who placed them there.—Where are they? They have passed away and their children's children have followed in their steps. How did the youth love the haunts and retreats of his father; how dear was every nook and corner of the domicile to his young heart; how, as years advanced, did his attachment grow stronger and stronger, until death handed him away, to make room for another.

What multitudes have here lived their day, and been taken forth to the grave to return no more! What a riot has joy and sorrow, hope and fear, held within these dreadful precincts! * * * * * * *

Chemistry has indeed opened the portals of a strange world to the curious rambler through her devious paths. The mists which hovered over the world of matter have been dissipated before this sun of the scientific firmament; and the student now finds himself moving in a new creation.—He is surprised to behold in every leaflet upon the spray; in every pebble upon the bed of the stream; nay, in every mote which floats through the atmosphere around him distinct and expanding worlds for curious investigation. Every successive grade of inorganic as well as organic being furnishes but increasing evidences of the most wise and benevolent contrivance, until thought wearied with its flight, folds its pinions by the throne of a GREAT FIRST CAUSE, who sits above the universe, guiding its courses and controlling its infinite harmonies!

Besides the direct evidence of contrivance exhibited by nature in proof of the existence of a great first cause, inanimate creation may be properly compared to a vast mirror reflecting the character and attributes of God. It is to be regretted that contemplative minds have paid so little attention to this subject, which if not vitally important, is nevertheless, as all must admit, full of beauty and interest. Hervey, in his meditations was among the first who traced in the loveliest object of nature the collateral indications of the Divinity. The beautiful accordance of the passion flower with the number of the apostles and the circumstances of Christs' death and suffering, is doubtless well remembered.

In the progress of my own humble researches into that department of physics, comprising the natural sciences, I have encountered many of these parallelisms, which to me are as precise and just, as they are pleasing and wonderful I will mention here but a single example, derived from geology.

Granite is composed of three primitive minerals viz: mica, quartz, and feld-spar. Artificially they can never become associated, but are naturally and inseparably continued to constitute one substantial strong body. How emblamatic of the triune Deity! In both cases may be found three distinct existences all essential to the production or being of an unity.

But to pursue this specimen farther. Granite is seen upon the tops of the very highest mountains; above all rocks. In this connection may it not represent the exaltation and grandeur of Jehovah? It may likewise be found in the deepest bowels of the earth; at its very centre; below every other stratum. May it not thus regard God, as the great source and foundation of all things?

CLEANLINESS AND HEALTH.

The oldest inhabitant that we have talked with, does not remember a more cloudy summer than this has been, and thinks that the moisture and heat will be found productive of much inconvenience, and some sickness, when the fruit multiplies in the market, and that which has been drying and wilting for some days, finds purchasers on account of its cheapness. The same person is of opinion that heads of families should, at this time, and especially under existing circumstances, look to their cellars, the yards of their houses, alleys, &c., and after some care in cleansing them out, they should make a liberal application of chloride—all this by way of prevention. When the cholera came, or was close upon us, all these precautions were adopted with great spirit and extent, and there can be no doubt that immense good resulted therefrom.—The same care will preserve health at this time. We have no cholera; indeed but then all who are exposed to the injurious effects of bad air, must sooner or later feel the consequences, and a respect for coming years, and for the comfort of neighbors, should induce these precautions.

Great care should be taken of children, too, at the present time. They are peculiarly exposed, and the weekly statement of mortality shows a most frightful ravage among the little ones. Hearts are smitten, hopes blighted, affections tried, and the closest relationships sundered. Caution may not save, but it will be a consolation at the worst to know that all has been done.

Blackberry Syrup.—The following is the receipe for making the famous Blackberry Syrup. No family should be without it; all who try it, will find it a sovereign remedy for bowel complaints:

"To two quarts of blackberry juice; add half an ounce each of powdered nutmeg, cinamon and alspice, and a quarter of an ounce of powdered cloves. Boil these together to get the strength of the species, and to preserve the berry juice. While hot add a pint of fourth proof pure French brandy, and sweeten with loaf sugar. Give a child two teaspoonsful three times a day, and if the disorder is not checked, add to the quantity."

☞Lyford's Journal says that the quantity of flour inspected in Baltimore during the year ending with June last, amounted to seven hundred & fifty-six thousand eight hundred and eighty-two barrels, and eleven half barrels. This exceeds in amount any previous year since 1798; the next largest being that which ended with June, 1840, which was 734,978 bbls., and 24,196 half bbls.

Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry.

We would advise our readers who are laboring under an affection of the lungs, to make immediate trial of this truly excellent medicine. The most intelligent and respectable families of our city have adopted it as a favorite family medicine; and persons predisposed to consumption, who have used it, speak in the highest terms of its efficacy.

Scores of individuals have been cured of Asthma, the early stages of Consumption, Bleeding of the lungs, obstinate coughs, etc., by this Balsam, after hope had well night yielded to despair. We say this in all candor. It is indeed a melancholy truth that thousands fall victims to Consumption every year, from no other cause than neglected Colds; yet we find hundreds, nay thousands, who treat such complaints with the greatest indifference, and let them run on for weeks, and even months, without thinking of the danger.

IT IS WORTH ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD!—Such was the declaration of a gentlemen on Friday last after having used "Sellers' Cough Syrup" for a distressing cough, that made him feel very uncomfortable through the day, and prevented him from sleeping a great part of the night

We do not say that this Syrup will always cure, but we DO say that 99 persons out of every hundred who have used it pronounce it the best cough mixture that has as yet been offered to the public The Syrup is put up in 50 cent bottles

Head Quarters,
12th Brigade, 2d Division M. M.

EASTON, July 24th 1846.

FOR the purpose of making the necessary arrangements for the equipment and discipline of the Volunteer Companies which are now organised in the 12th Brigade, it is desirable to ascertain at the earliest period the precise number—location—and description of said companies. The commanding officers of Regiments nad Battalions and the Captains who have been elected to command such companies, will therefore make an immediate report to the Brigadier General of every Volunteer Company in which it has been positively ascertained that there will be at least 32 men in uniform rank and file

These reports will state as nearly as possible the whole number of men of which the companies will probably be composed, the kind of arms they will require, the place of Company meeting and the time at which they will be ready for Inspection. The uniform of such companies will be required to consist of substantial materials, suitable for service at any season.

The certificates of Inspection will in all cases contain a discription of the uniform, they will also state the Regiment to which the company is to be attached and the corps to which it belongs, whether Artillery, Cavalry, Infantry or Riflemen.

Those Companes which have not adopted their Arms are recommended to select muskets, as there is ample supply of that description of arms

The officers of the regular Militia are hereby ordered to require the performance of militia duty from every citizen who may be subject to the same and who shall not have equipped himself fully as a member of a Volunteer Company, on or before the first day of September next.

Etrurian Wheat.

A SMALL quantity of the above wheat may be had for seeds, by any one wishing to sow it this fall, by application to Mr. Graham if immediately made.

It is highly recommended to the Farmers of the United States by the Editor of "American Farmer" (in volume 1. No. 12) who has become the agent for the sale of it at $2 per bushel. It is an early white wheat, with a smooth head, very strong vigorous growth, though not fly proof—where the grower of it in this neighborhood had supposed it almost destroyed last fall, it recovered and produced over eight bushels to one. A sample may be seen at the Gazette Office.
