RANDOM REVERIES.

"From grave to gay—from lively to severe"

No. IV.

The thoughts of other days are rushing on me,
The loved,—the lost,—the distant and the dead,
Are with me now, and I will mingle with them
Till my sense fails, and my raised heart is wrapt
In secret suspension of mortality.
Marturin's Bertram.

Again, gentle reader, have we taken up our pen to hold a little quiet converse with thee. It is now the dead noon of night and the aching limbs of the old man would fain invite repose. But an hour must go by and yet another ere the eye shall be sealed in slumber, or the brow forget its strange musings.

There are seasons when a deep shadow steals over the sky of the mind, which all the exertion of philosophy is inadequate to remove. It comes unbidden and passes away quite as mysteriously. We have paused amid the hard toil of books—pushed aside the curtain of the study-window and rested our thought worn brow upon our hand, looking out into the still, dark night, and awaiting the refreshing southwest as it steals up from the moist earth to play with the scattered locks of our frosty and care-worn temples. Pleasant wind, how often have we felt thy soothing influence! How often, redolent of the sweets of an hundred flower gardens hast thou come to us in the still solitary evening of age, like a gentle messenger from the thrice blest Araby of childhood! From the earliest years of our existence, dear reader, have we been enamoured of the solemn and companionable night. Its silent stars and lonely shadows have been ever dear to us. And now, at this distant period, we hail it as a long-loved friend whose eloquent voice has often inspired us to noble deeds or soothed us amid the sorrows and cares with which an unfeeling world would seek to harden the spirit.

"The night
Hath been to me a more familiar face
Than that of man; and in her starry shade
Of dim and solitary loveliness,
I learned the language of another world."

You will not always find us the same, dear reader, a flash of sunlight may sometimes break upon the pathway of age—the hues of a happy boyhood sometimes encircle it with a rainbow of cheerful beauty; but oftener, I trow, will it dwell in the shadow of that future, which shall consign ere many days the old relic who now shares thy pleasant intercourse to the unbroken repose of the church yard dead.—God bless thee, reader, when near the verge of a long existence thou canst sit down in the solitude of such a night as this, and looking over the sands of time behold in awful perspective all that were once held so dear and regarded as so permanent!—There are the years on that dim receding shore once bright with clustering roses and cheered with song. They seemed to us a full and lengthened life beyond which was formed no dream, no anticipation. Feelings one by one come swelling up; voices long unheard but not forgotten—kindly memories, to remind us of the treasured and the lost. There are the familiar faces that once greeted us—there the smiles that diffused life over the social band—there the reckless playmates that shook the hill top and vallies with their shouts of irrepressible mirthfulness. In the dim distance we behold the friend who shared with us so many seasons of happy companionship—how elastic was his lion step—how flushed his brow—how large his attainments—how high his hopes!—and there too lingers the fond being who first called the blush to our cheek—who woke in our young breast the first dream of love, perhaps the last. The low soft whisper has died upon her lip, the bloom faded from her temples—the light from her brow—the pulse from her heart!

In that shadowy land are those who contributed to the gladness of the household hearth. Long long ago has that old hearth stone been desolate. It was not always so. The tranquil charm that bound us was once undisturbed, and fondly deemed we that the Spoiler, ever busy in the world around us, would pause many many years ere his rude step could invade so happy and peaceful a retreat as ours. Father—mother—brother—sister—the affectionate solicitude—the light song—the merry dance—the cheerful blaze—the crickets' pleasant chirpings—but our eyes are getting full and the surcharged heart must be relieved or break. From the busy scenes of life we have sometimes returned to the home of our youth, but how sadly changed was the picture! From the crumbling wall and broken porch-way, ruin glared upon us with the stony eyes of a foul spectre; and the echo of our steps was answered in the dismantled chamber of a dreary soul.

"Ah! there in desolation cold,
The desert serpent dwelt alone
* * * * * *
And stones themselves to ruin grown,
Like me were death like old——"

Well do we remember the first cloud that darkened the sky of our little Eden. A noble boy of three springs who had taught us all the sin of idolatry, after toying through the long summer months with the fruitage and flowers was gathered with them to the earth, in the latter autumn. It seemed strange that he who had been so long our only companion in the pastimes of the nursery and field should have fallen asleep ere night and left us to pursue our amusements alone. Alas! we had never looked on death; and when the pale limbs and rigid form of that young brother were wrapped up in the snowy shroud, and born away to the sad burial ground we wondered that they had taken him from his own comfortable little couch, which we had shared for so long a time, to be laid by himself in the cold and unsheltered churchyard. The chain once broken the work of destruction could not be stayed. One and another after intervals of weeks, months or years, which swept by on rapid wings, slept by the side of him who was the first to leave our household band. But how shall we advert to that bereavement which more than all else shrouded our hearts in gloom, and severing the chain that bound us, scattered its links to be reunited never. She who had watched our early hours, who had supported each onward step of childhood, who had rejoiced and wept with us in the pleasures and sorrows of our family circle, she also was forced to abandon the living to be a mother to the dead. Years have passed since that hour but the clod which fell heavily upon the coffin lid still fills our ear, and as readily as then at the mention of her name does the tear start to the eye and roll down our rugged cheek. Many & eventful have been the changes of our brief existence—adverse it courses—with little to gladden or cheer the soul, but amid all the voice of that sainted mother has come over us like the tones of Eolian melody mellowed by distance, leading us back to the days of purity & childhood. It humbled us in our moments of pride; reproved us when loitering in the devious paths of error; soothed us in the hour of adversity; and encouraged us in the season of despondency & peril. At such a period as this shut out from the world with nought but the stirless solitudes of nature around us, do we hold sweet communion with our absent and revered mother; and feel her presence almost tangible to the senses.

"Now the form of the departed
Enters at the open door
The beloved the true hearted
Comes to visit me once more.
* * * * * * *
"With a slow and noiseless footstep
Comes that messenger divine,
Takes the vacant chair beside me,
Lays her gentle hand in mine.

"And she sits and gazes at me
With those deep and tender eyes
Like the stars so still and saint like,
Looking downward from the skies."

But it is time these discursive musings should have an end. Sad has been our communion dear reader but the heart of the old man has been too full to say less.—Thoughts of the dead are ours more than of the living. Upon the past the unchangeable past we love too too much to dwell. It is not hard to feel the moss growing over the temples when those who shared our early joys have gone away and left us in the "bleak world" alone. The opening grave is no longer repulsive when there is little left on earth to cherish. We love to linger in the deepning shadow of that land where the whirlwind sleeps forever; and the toils and vicissitudes and sorrows which afflict us here are felt no longer. It familiarizes us with all that we must soon become; and speaks to the spirit of that solemn moment; "when the silver cord shall be loosed—the golden bowl broken!"

It is impossible for us to compress into our narrow limits even a brief allusion to all of the numerous cures that have been affected by Dr. Wistar's Balsam. We can only refer to a very few as specimens of its general efficacy.

A few days ago, a lady called at the office in fine health, and looking as robust as though she never new what sickness was. To our surprise, she stated that until recently she had been sick for between three and four years with what was supposed to be Consumption—that she had a violent cough, night sweats, with alternate chills and fever, and every usual symptom of confirmed Consumption. The result was, that she became so emaciated as to present more the appearance of a skeleton than a living being. Providentially, she, at this time, heard of the wonderful cures performed by Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, and commenced using it herself. The effect was, that she began to get better at once. By degrees, the cough left her, the chills and fever disappeared, and in two months she again found herself in perfect health.

SELLERS' VERMIFUGE!—The great worm medicine of the day—Parents, read the following and if your children are troubled with worms, get a vial and try it.

LICKING STATION, Ky. Dec 10, 1845

Mr R. E. Sellers—I purchased of B. F & J. H Gardiner two vials of your truly valuable Vermifuge, two of my children being sick at the time. Your Vermifuge proved more than I could have expected; from one child there passed nearly 300 worms, in about 40 hours; from the other some 200 in about the same time after the Vermifuge was given. I heartily recommend its use to all families, and I think once tried, no family will ever be without it

Yours respectfully,

GOLD PEN.

WARRENTED.

THIS Pen received the highest premium at the last Fair of the American Institute, and has been pronounced by the first teachers of Penmanship in the country, to be infinitely superior to any Gold Pen ever before introduced to the American public. These Pens are indistructible except by actual violence—no ink will injure them—retain their elasticity, and the peculiar shape of the nibs, (which was first introduced by Bagley) makes it more pleasant to use, renders it less liable to damage, more easy to repair, and prevents the necessity of the great care that other articles of the kind require.

RELIGIOUS NOTICE.

Protracted Meeting in Talbot Co.

THE DISCIPLES will hold a protracted meeting at the "OAK" on the ground recently occupied by the Methodist Camp, the use of which has been kindly given them by Major Dawson—to be continued for 4 or 5 days commencing Friday, August 28th at early candle light. The meeting will be conducted by several distinguished ministers from different parts of the country. Elder Robert F. Ferguson—Elder John Young, of Trenton N. Jersey, and Mr. John D Ferguson of Kentucky. George Austin, of Baltimore are all expected to be present and take part in the meeting. Two or three discourses will be delivered each day of the meeting by these gentlemen who are of reputation and high standing as ministers of the Gospel.

The Disciples—few in number in this immediate neighborhood and consequently without a house of sufficient size for such a meeting, have determined on the erection of a large and comfortable "Board Tent" at the above named place under which the audience will be effectually protected from both sun and rain.

It is expected that many highly interesting and important points in the teachings of the Saviour and his Apostles will be brought before the public in the discussion of which a careful and scrupulous regard will be had for the views of others upon these subjects.

The citizens of Easton, St. Michaels and of Talbot county generally especially those who feel an interest in the subject of Religion, are most respectfully and affectionately invited to attend.

Etrurian Wheat.

A SMALL quantity of the above wheat may be had for seeds, by any one wishing to sow it this fall, by application to Mr. Graham if immediately made.

It is highly recommended to the Farmers of the United States by the Editor of "American Farmer" (in volume I. No. 12 who has become the agent for the sale of it at $2 per bushel. It is an early white wheat, with a smooth head, very strong vigorous growth, though not fly proof—where the grower of it in this neighborhood had supposed it almost destroyed last fall, it recovered and produced over eight bushels to one. 12th Brigade, 2d Division M. M

EASTON, July 24th 1846.

FOR the purpose of making the necessary arrangements for the equipment and discipline of the Volunteer Companies which are now organised in the 12th Brigade it is desirable to ascertain at the earliest period the precise number—location—and description of said companies. The commanding officers of Regiments and Battalions and the Captains who have been elected to command such companies, will therefore make an immediate report to the Brigadier General of every Volunteer Company in which it has been positively ascertained that there will be at least 32 men in uniform rank and file

These reports will state as nearly as possible the whole number of men of which the companies will probably be composed, the kind of arms they will require, the place of Company meeting and the time at which they will be ready for Inspection. The uniform of such companies will be required to consist of substantial materials, suitable for service at any season.

The certificates of Inspection will in all cases contain a discription of the uniform, they will also state the Regiment to which the company is to be attached and the corps to which it belongs, whether Artillery, Cavalry, Infantry or Riflemen.

Those Companes which have not adopted their Arms are recommended to select muskets, as there is ample supply of that description of arms

The officers of the regular Militia are hereby ordered to require the performance of militia duty from every citizen who may be subject to the same and who shall not have equipped himself fully as a member of a Volunteer Company, on or before the first day of September next.
