THE SHOWER.

(Sunday 9th instant.)

The clouds consign their treasures to the fields
And softly shaken on the dimpled pool
Prelusive drops, let all their moisture flow,
In large effusion, o'er the freshened world. THOMPSON.
And yet it comes! the lightning's flash
Hath torn the lowering cloud,
With a distant roar, and nearer crash,
Outbursts the thunder cloud
It comes with the rush of a God's descent
On the hush'd and trembling earth,—

MILLER.

As the mariner in distress, gazes anxiously out upon the broad sea for some friendly sail, so longeth the husbandman, in the season of drought, for the rain-bearing cloud. There is an anxiety in his knit brow, an impatience in his abrupt step, and a world of despondency in his laboured sigh which betoken no ordinary calamity. He is forever making observations, like an Astronomer, and calculating with mathematical precision the chances of a shower from the little ribbond of vapour which has lost its way into the blue occident. You may generally find him seated on the bench in front of his door—or leaning his arm in the crotch of some discourse-loving orchard-tree—or checking his heated steed in the shade of the roadside at noonday, to chat with one of his own calling about the miseries of drought, and the inevitable certainty of famine without a speedy deliverance by rain. In this way he becomes confirmed in his own calamitous forebodings, besides adding to his stock many new features of the subject set forth by his more eloquent neighbor, until the luckless man begins to imagine, that all the woes of life belong to the tillers of the soil—that he is especially the victim of persecution by both Earth and Heaven—and that rain will never come until the corn fields are all in a light blaze, and it becomes necessary to save the world from a general conflagration by sending down water to extinguish it! Withal there is no selfishness in this for know that drought opens the farmers' bowels of compassion, and makes him the most disinterested of mortals. Let his pocket groan in the prospect of emptiness—he heeds it not. His heart is entirely absorbed in the misfortunes of that amiable plant whose green-tops glisten in his fields; and when he speaks of the disastrous effects of dry weather he very sympathizingly reminds you that the POOR CORN is suffering—that it wants rain most sadly—and that without rain the dear crops must perish!

On Friday last, at midday, up came the cloud and dark grew the atmosphere.—The hearts of thousands palpitated for joy—the trees nodded their heads—the cornfields drooped their blades meekly—and every thing was in hushed expectancy of the shower. Nevertheless it came not—but after tantalizing us with fair promises floated off far over the bay, and deluged the city of Baltimore with its favors. Sunday has come, the old brass clock passed on to almost four—and suddenly the page over which I have been pouring for the last hour is growing more deeply shaded. Thank God! the shadow is not confined to my book, but extends over the whole broad landscape—and it is the shadow of a cloud! And now for the long expected visit of the old fashioned guest. All nature is awaiting the advent. Formerly he was wont to drop in frequently in a quiet way, and keep us company for a whole week at a time; until we were right glad to see the old fellow roll up his cloud baggage, and put off to other quarters. He has perhaps heard of our discontented remarks, and is resolved to take his revenge for a season. Be this as it may, here he comes, throned in a pavilion of clouds with the thunder for his herald, and the winds for his coursers. Lo! as he draws near what a sudden hubbub and commotion! The trees, from the princely oak to the modest cedar are bowing most furiously, like Frenchmen surprised by a bevy of ladies—the tall maize is bending its stately form over a thousand fields—the bosomy vales are swelling with exultation—even the little daisy in the still shelter of the hills is dropping a gentle curtesy as his majesty passes by—while the little brooks and rivulets are running all about and dancing with the wildest joy. Sure never was monarch so gratefully—so joyously—so triumphantly received, as is the shower-god by his myriad dependants.

But seriously, reader, all metephor aside how pleasant is it, after a long and weary drought, to see once more the Heavens open, and the flood of water descend upon the earth! And when the violence of the storm has subsided to see the big rain drops fall plashing on the twangling leaf, and dimpled pool, and dripping eaves! It is pleasant to the thirsty field, and parched meadowland—pleasant to the desponding farmer—pleasant to the feverish invalid—pleasant to the way-worn traveller who lays his dusty sandals aside at the cottage door.

But suddenly the cloud has lightened—opened with a smile like the parted lips of a pretty-faced girl—and lo! it is gone!—And now the whole sky and earth put on their brightest, happiest hues, and the pulse of gratitude throbs through a million arteries. How cool, and refreshing, and fragrant is the breath of evening! Every flower and shrub and tree has parted with a portion of its sweetness, and the air is burdened with the delicious aroma of flower gardens, and meadows, and slopes, and forests!

Reader, in hall or cot, hast thou paused to contemplate the blessings of the shower and give thanks to God for the unmeasured gift? If not I pity thy insensibility, and pray thee a better heart!

Value of Ancient Manuscripts—One of the Egyptian Ptolemies refused to supply the famished Athenians with wheat until they presented him with the original manuscripts of Aeschylus, Sophocles and Euripides; and in returning copies of these originals, he allowed the Athenians to retain the fifteen talents which he had pledged with them as a princely security.

Peter Mignard painted a Magdalen on a canvass fabricated at Rome. A broker, in concert with Mignard, went to the Chevalier de Clairville, and told him as a secret that he was to receive from Italy a Magdalen of Guido, and his master-piece. The chevalier caught the bait, begged the preference, and purchased the picture at a very high price. He was informed that he had been imposed upon, and that the Magdalen was painted by Mignard. Mignard himself caused the alarm to be given, but the amateur would not believe it; all the connoisseurs agreed that it was a Guido, and the famous Le Brun corroborated this opinion. The chevalier came to Mignard; —"Some persons assure me that my Magdalen is your work."—"Mine! they do me great honor; I am sure Le Brun is not of this opinion,"—"Le Brun is positive it can be no other than a Guido, you shall dine with me, and meet several of the first connoisseurs." On the day of the meeting, the picture was again more closely inspected: Mignard hinted his doubts whether the piece was the work of that great master; he insinuated that it was possible to be deceived, & added, that if it was Guido's he did not think it in his best manner. "It is a Guido, Sir, and in his very best manner," replied Le Brun with warmth; and all the critics were unanimous. Mignard then spoke in a firm tone of voice, "And I, gentlemen, will wager three hundred louis that it is not a Guido." The dispute now became violent, and Le Brun was desirous of accepting the wager. 'No Sir,' replied Mignard, "I am too honest to bet when I am certain to win: Monsieur Le Chevalier, this piece cost you 2000 crowns: the money must be returned,—the painting is mine." Le Brun would not believe it. "The proof," Mignard continued, "is easy; on this canvass, which is a Roman one, was the portrait of a cardinal; I will show you his cap." The chevalier did not know which of the rival artists to credit. The proposition alarmed him. "He who painted the picture" said Mignard, "shall repair it." He took a pencil dipped in oil, and rubbing the hair of the Magdalen, discovered the cap of the cardinal. The honour of the ingenious painter could no longer be questioned; Le Brun, vexed, sarcastically exclaimed, "Always paint Guido, never Mignard."

Freedom of the Press—When the Danish Ambassador complained to William III of the freedom which Lord Motesworth had exercised on his master's government in his history of Denmark, and hinted that if a Dane had done the same with the King of England, the Danish Sovereign would, on complaint, have taken the author's head off,—"That I cannot do," replied the King, "but if you please, I will tell him what you say, and he shall put it into the next edition of his book."

Local Attachment—In the remote village of Petit Bornand, in a wild valley above Bonneville, is a valuable painting by Guido, of our Saviour's removal from the cross. The manner in which this painting was brought here is singular. A native of this place lived many years at Rome in the service of a cardinal: at last, becoming old, he wished to return and end his days in the land of his fathers. The Cardinal gave him his leave; adding, that in reward for his long and faithful services, he wished him to choose out of his palace any one article he might wish to take away with him. The domestic said he should choose the painting of the "removal from the cross," which he had often looked at in the Cardinal's gallery, as he wished to present it to the church of his native village. The Cardinal was unprepared for this request; however, as he had promised, he allowed his servant to take the painting away.

Kitchens of King John—In an order dated April 19, 1206, for erecting two new kitchens to dress the royal dinners in, it is particularly directed that each be provided with a furnace sufficiently large to roast two or three oxen.

Ancient Church Books—At the commencement of the fifteenth century the manuscript books of the church were articles of great rarity and price. When a priest named Henry Beda, in the year 1406, bequeathed his manuscript breviary to the church of Jacques la Boucherie, he left at the same time, to William l'Exale the churchwarden of said church, the sum of forty sols, to pay the expense of having a cage made in which the breviary might be kept. The pious and learned persons of those times assembled around such books for the purpose of reading their prayers; but that no one might be tempted to take them away, they were attached to a chain which was fastened in the wall.

"Extreme self-lovers," says Bacon, "will set a man's house on fire, though it were but to roast their eggs." Some one has defined egotism to be "keeping the private I too much in the public eye."

It is not an uncommon expression, to say of a dull stupid person that, he cannot tell a hawk from a handsaw." The proper reading is "a hernshaw or hernsaw," which term was long the popular one for "heron." and so used by Spencer and other English writers. The proverb is as old as Shakspeare, who puts the words into the month of Hamlet.

The name Oxford is of curious derivation. The original word was "Ouse-ney-ord," the ford at or near Ouseney or the meadow of Ouse. This name passed through a variety of forms; as, Oksnaforda, Oksnaford, Oxeneford, and Oxenford, of which last Oxford is a contraction.

GEN. GAINES.—A letter from Washington, published in the Sun states "that the President has approved the decision of the Court of Inquiry relative to the conduct of Gen Gaines. The court it is said disapproves of some of his acts and approves of others. His calling out of volunteers after the arrival of Gen. Taylor's victories is one of the acts disapproved. In conclusion, in consideration of the patriotism of the General, the court recommended that the case be dismissed."

Treasury Notes.—The Washington Union of Friday states that the Secretary of the Treasury has authorized, under the advice of the President of the United States, and in conformity with the act of July last, the issue, on that day, of treasury notes to the amount of half a million of dollars of the denomination of $50 and $100. Notes of a large denomination will hereafter be occasionly issued. The Union adds—"We understand from the best authority that the Secretary of the Treasury has uniformly avowed his determination to issue no treasury notes under $50."

Peace with Mexico.—It is very generally believed that Mexico has offered terms of peace which cannot be rejected by us.—She offers to defray the expenses of the war and sell us California.—N. Y. News.

From the fact that the two companies of mounted riflemen at Fort McHenry have just received orders to repair to the Rio Grande with all possible despatch, and report themselves to Gen. Taylor, we presume the above statement is incorrect.—Balt. Sun.

The Alexandria Gazette thinks that the enormous expense of long sessions of Congress may be saved hereafter, by a proper understanding in advance with the President, upon the subjects to which he intends to apply the veto.

The Philadelphia Correspondent of the Baltimore Sun says:

Judge Kennedy, of the United States Supreme Court, died last night, (26th inst.)

☞S. Teakle Wallis, Esq., of Baltimore has been elected an Honorary Member of the Royal Society of Northern Antiquaries Denmark.

Dr. Wistar's Great Discovery.

It was once said "There is nothing new under the sun." This has been emphatically true, in regard to medicines. Hundreds of Pills, Panaceas, Expectorants, and Specifics of all sorts have been puffed into notoriety—all made mainly of the same ingredients, adding no new materials to the healing art. But Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry furnishes a new medical agent—a new principle evolved from nature's own depository. It cures Asthma, incipient Consumption, Liver Complaint, and all diseases of the Lungs, when nothing else will. An honorable member of the Canadian Parliament writes that it has cured him of Asthma of ten years standing. A. Williams, Esq., Attorney at Law, 58 William street, New York, was cured of the same disease of twenty-four years' standing. Mr. Cozens, of Haddonfield, N. J., makes affidavit that it cured him of a supposed Consumption, after physicians had given him up to die; and so of hundreds of others.

☞Remember, we positively, in no case, palm off unreal cures as produced by this invaluable remedy. Be sure to get "Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry."

LICKING STATION, Ky., Dec. 17th 1845.

Mr. R. E. Sellers:—I have the pleasure to inform you that I have used in my practice your celebrated Vermifuge with the most happy results. I have formerly used Fahnestock's but being persuaded to try yours, I have found it far superior in every respect, and can say without the fear of contradiction, that your Vermifuge possesses more virtue than any I ever used, and most cordially recommend it to the attention of the public. I will state a case where I gave one vial of your vermifuge: My brother's child was piaing and wasting to a mere skeleton; in 30 hours after I gave the Vermifuge, the enormous quantity of upwards of six hundred worms were passed. The child that was given up as lost, is now well and as hearty as any in the neighborhood. AMBROSE ARNETT, M. D.

Hemsley's Worm Destroying

SYRUP is performing wonders in the East, read the following letter from a respectable old Lady, who resides in Connecticut "Having used a bottle of your Worm Destroying Syrup I hereby send you a statement of my cure, (which I consider a very remarkable one) in order that any who are afflicted with worms, may be induced to try your invaluable medicine. For the last thirteen years I have been very much afflicted, and thought the cause of my affliction was worms, but I had repeatedly taken the usual medicine prescribed by Physicians, without receiving any benefit therefrom. My case gradually grew worse and for the last two years I have suffered so severely that I had no hopes of ever getting better—My mind became affected and my reason a good deal shattered, in consequence of my bodily sufferings, and for three months of the time I dare not suffer myself to go to sleep while lying down, on account of being frequently choked while in that position. A short time since, I tried a bottle of your Worm Destroying Syrup which brought away an astonishing quantity of worms of every sort and size. Of the whole quantity there could not have been less than three quarts. Since that I have been entirely relieved, and enjoy good health which I have not done before for thirteen years.
