MINISTER TO ST. PETERSBURG.—The Washington Union states that the Hon. Ralph W. Ingersell, of Connecticut, was in that city, on Wednesday, making arrangements for his mission to St. Petersburg. He expects to leave the United States in the month of November.

WHIG NOMINATIONS.—The Whig State Convention of New York, met at Utica, on Wednesday, to nominate candidates for Governor and Lieut. Governor. John Young, of Livingston county, was nominated for Governor, and Hamilton Fish, of New York city, for Lieutenant Goveruor.

COUNTERFEITERS.—No less than seven men have been arrested at Nashville, Tenn., charged with being engaged in the manufacture of base coin.

THE BRITISH TARIFF.—The chain cables and anchors required for the large ship now building by Mr. L. H. Duncan, for a house in Charleston, have been ordered from England as it has been found that that they can be imported under the new tariff for about $200 less than they can be manufactured at home. By this operation alone, at least $3,000 will be thrown into the hands of British manufacturers by the policy of James K. Polk & his party which otherwise would have been expended in Baltimore.—[Whig Standard.

THE CONFESSION.

She was a form of life and light,
That, seen, became a part of sight;
And rose, where'er I turned mine eye,
The morning star of memory.
[THE GIAOUR.

Bring hither a chair, my dearest, for the old man, and place his crutches gently on the carpet beside him. There, that will do. I feel full-hearted to-day. Come, therefore, take thy seat near me, and let me discourse to thee of the past; and should'st thou tire of my garrulous tongue say nothing, but step lightly out of the room and allow me to talk on as though you were still at my side. But first let me take thee on my knee—hold thy sweet face near to my failing orbs, and look once more into its quiet and holy mysteries.—Beautiful art thou, Jessie, beautiful exceedingly. Dark and soul-stirring are those deeply lashed eyes of thine, eloquent of thought and sensibilty. Pure, lovely and serene, as a piece of sky seen through the storm rift, is that brow half revealed by the cloud of raven tresses, which, falling over thy temples, steals wooingly down beyond the ripe cheek to sleep upon the gently swelling arch of thy aristocratic throat. How, would'st thou shrink back into the shadow of thy blushes, my sweet neice, were a hand less aged and wrinkled than mine passed around thy delicate waist; or a more youthful lip pausing occasionally in its prattle, to kiss away the smile from thy mouth of budding roses? As I gaze steadfastly upon thee, the past haunts me with a sensible, a spiritual presence. Thoughts and feelings are dwelling up within me silently, like the waters of some unsealed fountain, and my soul is filled to overflowing. Thou remindest me, Jessie, of one whose name has been long since engraven on my memory in uneffaceable characters—the only being who ever roused one throb of love in the old man's heart. At sixteen she was beautiful as thou; and had you been placed side by side it would have required better eyes than mine now are, to distinguish the one from the other. Here is her miniature by an artist who never enjoyed the prerogative of a sitter, but painted his only picture by occasional glimpses of his subject. For two years did I devote myself to the study of the art, that I might be able to trace some faint resemblance of one pure being. No eye but mine watched the progress of the work—no heart knew the secret but my own. Once over my brushes were laid away in the small box on the mantel which has so often provoked your maidenly curiosity, and never removed from it again. Thirty years have passed time away since then, & the frosts of like the snow upon the old bough is pressing the aged head surely & silently to the earth. When the time arrives for me to be borne away from thee dearest to the solemn churchyard, take that picture, treasure it because it was dear to this old heart through many a weary hour; and let its history live with thee, and die when thou diest. I shall soon see thee no more, my child. Autumn and winter may go by and you shall meet me not in these accustomed haunts. But when the spring returns to bring sunbeams and flowers wilt thou sometimes stand upon the spot where they have disposed the old man to sleep, and think over all that he is telling you now. Forgive these tears, Jessie, but you were too young to know the best of mothers and the noblest of women. One of her last acts was to place your infant hand in mine, and beg that I would be a parent to her fatherless and motherless child. How I have redeemed my promise you will understand hereafter. Mad has been the idolatry I have lavished upon you, my fond Jessie—dear the delight with which I have traced each feature of herself in you, the pledge of her friendship—and the strong anxiety I have felt to cast in the same mould every thought and feeling of you young hearrt.

Simple is the story of my love. Early in the summer of —— I accepted an invitation to pass a week of the hunting season at Radnor Park, the residence of Col Sumner. My younger brother had been for some time betrothed to an only daughter of this gentleman which circumstance enhanced my desire to comply with the wishes of the family. In a visit protracted beyond the intended period I formed the acquaintance of your mother, and learned to love her with a devotion rendered more intense by the hopelessness of the passion. The season for my brother's nuptials arrived, and none would have judged from the bright smile that lighted my cheek, that the heart below it was dark, cold, and cheerless. The sacrifice was to be offered; and I nerved me to the task. Years of domestic bliss succeeded during which my attentions to the family were more than fraternal. At length an accident sent your father out of the world, and left his widow in desolation and broken-heartedness. A lingering consumption seized upon her delicate frame, and invested her with a new and strange interest. For

"There is sweetness in woman's decay,
When the light of her beauty is fading away,
When the bright enchantment of youth is gone,
And the tint that glowed, and the eye that shone
And departed around its glance of power,
And the lip that vied with its sweetest flower,
That ever in Pœstum's garden blew,
Or ever was steeped in fragrant dew,
When all that was bright and fair, is fled,
But the loveliness lingering round the dead."

Gradually feebler became her step—her form more slender and emaciated—her eye more spiritually bright—and her tones more gentle, rill-like, and musical.

Often was her easy chair moved at suns set to this window, where we would it together for hours conversing of past joys and sorrows; and sometimes adverting calmly and rationally to the solemn event dawning upon us out of the dim future. Yet I breathed not a word of my love. Alas! what mockery to excite such feelings at such a time! How cruel to tinge the cheek with the blush of earthly passion when the hectic of disease was already rioting there—to blend the light of human hope in eyes already beaming with the lustre of approaching dissolution! Nevertheless I have sometimes thought that she could read my heart, and had passed down to her grave with the consciousness of all I felt. At length the last evening of our converse came. It was far advanced in the summer months. We were seated at this window, and the twilight had already gathered around us its gray shadows. She was more than usually eloquent, and the pathos of her latest words filled my eyes with tears on that occasion, and have continued to linger in my memory to this hour. It was then she placed your hand in mine and exacted from me the promise to love and protect you, in the devious paths of your future pilgrimage. Alas! there was little need of such a request. A pause of some minutes, followed by a long period of unbroken silence awakened my apprehensions. I stepped forward and laid my hand on her brow. It was cold as marble. The spirit of your sainted mother had stolen quietly to Heaven, and you, my child, lay clasped in her arms, asleep on her pulseless bosom. Years have gone, and each evening at the same hour I have occupied this seat, and recalled that closing scene, so replete with sad and mournful interest. But the chair will soon be vacant. My sands are nearly run out.—The old man will leave thee, Jessie, after a little—leave thee with his blessings and prayers—leave thee to return no more.—Kiss me once again, my sweet Jessie, and let the old man to his musings. At another time we will return to the subject, of which we have been talking to-day, and speak of many things to be treasured in a green abiding memory.

KNICKERBOCKER.

Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry.

The extraordinary success attending the use of this medicine in diseases of the lungs, and the many singular cures it has effected having naturally attracted the attention of many physicians, as well as the whole fraternity of quacks, various conjectures and surmises have arisen respecting its composition; some physicians have supposed it to contain iodine, other ignorant pretenders say it must contain mercury, and to some such substance they each attribute its singular efficacy. As such opinions are altogether erroneous, and calculated to prejudice many persons against it, we pledge our honour that it contains nothing of this kind, or anything the least injurious on the contrary, it is composed of the most simple substances, the principal of which are the extracts of tar and wild cherry bark, and the whole secret of its efficacy consists in the mode by which they are prepared.

SELLERS' VERMIFUGE!!—The great worm medicine of the day—Parents, read the following and if your children are troubled with worms, get a vial and try it.

LICKING STATION, Ky. Dec 10 1845

MR R. E. Sellers—I purchased of B. F & J H Gardiner two vials of your truly valuable Vermifuge two of my children being sick at the time. Your Vermifuge proved more than I could have expected; from one child there passed nearly 300 worms in about 40 hours; from the other some 200 in about the same time after the Vermifuge was given. I heartily recommend its use to all families, and I think once tried, no family will ever be without it.

Yours respectfully,
MASON COLLINSWORTH.

A DESIRABLE FARM
FOR SALE.

This farm is situated on Corsica Creek a branch of Chester river; the creek is navigable for vessels drawing 8 or 9 feet water, affording Fish, Oysters and Wild Fowl in their season. Two Steamboats stop within a mile of the farm weekly and three Packets sail out of the creek to Baltimore every week.

It is distant from Baltimore 50 miles and from Centreville the county town of Queen Ann's county 4 miles The farm is believed to contain 239 Acres, full one half of which is in

TIMBER AND WOOD.

A considerable amount of wood might be disposed of to advantage—there is also an inexhaustible supply of shell marl upon this farm by the use of which the land may be brought to a state of productiveness unsurpassed by any in that section

The Dwelling and out buildings are all in tolerable good order, a further description of the property is deemed unnecessary as any one disposed to buy will doubtless visit it.—The terms of sale are Cash $130 the residue in three equal instalments to be secured by endorsed notes payable in 1, 2 and 3 years after date with interest to be paid semi annually. Proposals will be received until the 20th day of September next and if not sold before that time it will be offered at Public sale on the 24th at which time a sale of all the House hold and kitchen furniture together with the stock and farming utensils of said farm will take place.
